Guide to Traditional Jewish Observance in a Hospital

.by Rabbi Jason Weiner
Cover art: Part of the “Jewish Contributions to Medicine” mural by Terry Schoonhover. Commissioned for Cedars-Sinai and on permanent display in the Harvey Morse Auditorium. Courtesy of Cedars-Sinai.
Dedicated in Loving Memory of

Ariel Avrech A"H

By his Beloved Grandparents
Rabbi Philip Harris Singer and Mrs. Celia Singer Dedicated by Howard Hyzen
In Honor of his Beloved Wife
Claire Hyzen

נדבט לבו ודברי תורה אליך חיים לזכר,numerou}
Table of Contents

Letters of Approbation .................................................. 9

Introduction ............................................................. 14

I. Categories of Illness ................................................... 17
   A. Minor Ailments .................................................... 17
   B. Incapacitating and Life-Threatening Illnesses ............. 17

II. Shabbat .............................................................. 21
   A. Dangerously Ill Patient on Shabbat/Holidays – General Principles .......... 21
   B. “Shinui” Doing a Shabbat labor in an awkward, backhanded manner ........ 24
   C. “Amira L’Akum” Asking someone who is not Jewish to violate Shabbat ...... 25
   D. Use of Electricity .................................................... 25
   E. Elevators, Electric Doors and Automatic Sensors on Shabbat .............. 30
   F. The Use of a Telephone ............................................. 35
   G. Use of the Call Button .............................................. 37
   H. Parking and Turning Off a Car .................................... 38
   I. Discharge on Shabbat/Holidays ................................... 39
   J. Writing on Shabbat ................................................... 41
   K. Shabbat Candles ...................................................... 43
   L. Kiddush & Havdalah ................................................ 45
   M. Food Preparation on Shabbat ...................................... 49
   N. Treatment on Shabbat ............................................... 51
   O. Pregnancy & Childbirth on Shabbat ................................ 55
   P. Nursing Mother on Shabbat ....................................... 58
   Q. Care for Infants & Children ....................................... 60

III. Festivals .............................................................. 62
   A. Chol Hamoed ......................................................... 63
   B. Rosh Hashanah ....................................................... 64
   C. Yom Kippur ............................................................. 65
      i. Eating in “Measurements” ....................................... 68
      ii. Pregnancy and Childbirth on Yom Kippur .................... 70
   D. Sukkot ................................................................. 71
   E. Chanukah .............................................................. 73
   F. Purim ................................................................. 74
   G. Passover ............................................................. 76
   H. Fast Days (other than Tisha B’Av & Yom Kippur) ............... 81
   I. Tisha B’Av ............................................................ 82
      i. Pregnancy and Childbirth on Tisha B’Av ..................... 83
IV. Laws Related to Food & Meals .................................................. 85
   A. Washing One’s Hands Prior to a Meal .............................. 85
   B. Blessings ........................................................................ 86
   C. Medication ..................................................................... 86
   D. Meat & Milk .................................................................. 87

V. Prayer ................................................................................. 89
   A. Tefillin ........................................................................... 92

VI. Interactions with Individuals of the Opposite Gender ........ 95
   A. Seclusion (“Yichud”) ................................................... 95
   B. Physical Contact ......................................................... 96

VII. Kohanim ........................................................................... 97

VIII. Post-Mortem Care .......................................................... 100
   A. Positioning of the Body ............................................... 100
   B. Treatment of the body on Shabbat and Festivals .......... 101
   C. Post-Mortem Care ....................................................... 101

Bibliography ............................................................................ 104
Index ....................................................................................... 105
Quick Reference Guide for Observant Jews at Cedars-Sinai .... 109
All contents of this work have been carefully reviewed by:

שלまとめא
Rabbi Gershon Bess
Rav of Congregation Kehillas Yaakov & Chaver Beit Din of the Rabbinical Council of California

שלまとめא
Rabbi Nachum Sauer
Yeshiva of Los Angeles, Dayan & Chaver Beit Din of the Rabbinical Council of California

שלまとめא
Rabbi Yosef Y. Shusterman
Rav of Chabad of Beverly Hills & Member of the Beit Din of the Vaad Rabbonim Lubavitch
ד"ע י"ו י"ו ל"ו י"ו

ל thânיה ול性命 ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ה"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"ו

ל"و
כבוד הרוחנג ר', רוחיה ליב וניה נין הוננפח בברך ציידר בּאָמָנוּת וּפּוֹרֶבֶת לַחֵיִיוֹת עַל
וכל עִמּוּךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל בּכֵלָה תֵעֵבֵר בַּכּוּרָה פַּמּוּרָה וּבּשְׁמָה יְחֵה.
שלוחון:ו"ה, ו' יום

כבוד ברייתא, כבודה לברך בּאָמָנוּת וּפּוֹרֶבֶת, וּכְלָה תֵעֵבֵר בַּכּוּרָה בּכֵלָה, וּפַמּוּרָה וּבּשְׁמָה יְחֵה.
כבוד ברייתא, כבודה לברך בּאָמָנוּת וּפּוֹרֶבֶת, וּכְלָה תֵעֵבֵר בַּכּוּרָה בּכֵלָה, וּפַמּוּרָה וּבּשְׁמָה יְחֵה.
כבוד ברייתא, כבודה לברך בּאָמָנוּת וּפּוֹרֶבֶת, וּכְלָה תֵעֵבֵר בַּכּוּרָה בּכֵלָה, וּפַמּוּרָה וּבּשְׁמָה יְחֵה.
RABBI ELAZAR R. MUSKIN
edor א"לעזר רוזנברג מוסקט

August 23, 2012

It is my honor to write this letter of approbation for Rabbi Jason Weiner’s work, “Guide to Traditional Jewish Observance in a Hospital.”

The Talmud in Megillah 28b states, “It was taught in the Academy of Elijah: Whoever studies Jewish law every day is assured that he will be destined for the world to come.” If the Talmud offers this as the reward for one who learns how much more so for one who not only learns Halakha, but also teaches it as well.

Rabbi Weiner is one of those few who not only spends time immersed in the study of Torah and Halakha, but also is a master teacher. I had the honor to work with Rabbi Weiner for three years at Young Israel of Century City where he not only served as the congregation’s first Assistant Rabbi, but also became a very dear personal friend. During his tenure, I soon discovered that Rabbi Weiner has an insatiable thirst for knowledge as well as an extraordinary ability to share his love for learning with others. This work is testimony to that ability.

In writing this guide for the Jewish patient, Rabbi Weiner has produced a masterpiece of clarity and organization. I have read the entire work and I am thrilled to endorse it as an excellent addition to the library of Halakhic works that are now being published in English.

May all who use this guide be confident that they are following the letter of the Halakha, and may they receive the divine blessing of a Refuah Shlema, a total recovery.

With Torah blessings, I remain,

Elazar Muskin

9501 OAKMORE ROAD • LOS ANGELES, CA 90035 • PHONE: 310/399-9442/9443 • FAX: 310/399-1832 • EMAIL: EMUSKIN@ PACBell.NET
SHUL OFFICE: YOUNG ISRAEL OF CENTURY CITY
9317 WEST PICO BOULEVARD • LOS ANGELES, CA 90035 • PHONE: 310/273-6954 • FAX: 310/273-7103 • EMAIL: SHULoffice@YICC.ORG
Iranian Rabbinical Council of Los Angeles

辊(dd) 12

רְבָּנוֹת איראֹניִיָּי מַעַּטַּמְּעַמַּק מָכָּא בָּלָאָבָא דְּרַחְּמַי בָּלָאָבָא דְּרַחְּמַי

Nov/24/11

ידעי תַּחְתָּהּ וּמָשְׁלֵיה הַבָּלָאָבָא מְעַלַּמֵּךְ דְּרַחְּמַי בָּלָאָבָא דְּרַחְּמַי

לַעֲדוּ הַזֶּה וּלְמַעַּמְּקָה הַבָּלָאָבָא מְעַלַּמֵּךְ דְּרַחְּמַי בָּלָאָבָא דְּרַחְּמַי.
26 حشوان 5762
Nov/23/11

مقدمه: به‌پایان‌داشتن بهره‌برداری بر اساس اثرات بر دنیای سلامت و بهداشت و وجود جامعه‌های بهداشت و سلامتی فرد نیز می‌تواند سالم پا‌پشت‌ای نکند.

روحانیت خود با حجاب‌گر توانایی کوشش نماید.

افراد بهداشت و پرستی، برای پیشرفت و نمونه‌گذاری خود را رو در رو با موقعیت‌های ناسان و جدید می‌یابند و خواستار آن‌ها که بدانند تصمیم درست و اخلاقی مورد تأیید نخواهد شد. برای کمک به این افراد و همچنین خانواده‌هاشان "ربای ویز" به‌پایان ماه ماه ملک "سید سامایی" با کوشش و پشت‌کاری زیاد، راهنمایی را که درست دارد، جمع آوری کرده و به‌اشتیار رسانده‌اند. در این کتاب، توانسته شده‌اند، همچنین این کتاب

توسط رایانه عالی‌مقام و مرجع مورد تأیید می‌باشد.

"ربای ویز" ساخته مشغول کمک به‌هم‌بینی به‌پایان شرکات به‌پایان ماه ملک "سید سامایی" با کوشش و پشت‌کاری زیاد، راهنمایی را که درست دارد، جمع آوری کرده و به‌اشتیار رسانده‌اند. در این کتاب، توانسته شده‌اند، همچنین این کتاب

موقتی به‌پایان برای افراد و همچنین شنا و سلامتی کا مل بیماران دارم.

هیأت روابط موقت کالیفرنیا

9240 W. Pico Blvd Los Angeles CA 90035

Guide to Traditional Jewish Observance in a Hospital
Introduction

Purpose

This booklet is designed to assist people observing traditional Jewish Law while undergoing medical treatment, particularly in the complex and unfamiliar environment of a hospital. Patients often have a difficult time orienting themselves to unfamiliar circumstances and may encounter questions that they have not previously faced. Furthermore, they may be unable to seek rabbinic counsel (on Shabbat and Festivals for example - the subject of much of this booklet), and are thus in search of guidance. Caregivers also frequently have questions regarding what Jewish Law has to say about patient care and the many issues they face when striving to do what is best for their patients.

The idea for this guide emanates from a variety of situations I have witnessed as the Jewish Chaplain at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, California. In this position, I hear stories from both the staff and patients about conflicts that sometimes arise as a result of a patient's desire to observe Jewish Law in the hospital. We have a principle that the Torah's “ways are ways of pleasantness and all its paths are peace” (Proverbs 3:17). The staff wants to respectfully accommodate all patients, and the patients want to carefully observe the laws of their religion in a manner that doesn't agitate anyone and is a sanctification of God's name.

To produce this guide, I have focused on learning about, clarifying, and discussing with the appropriate Medical Center leadership all of the major policies that are relevant to Jewish observance in a hospital setting. Great effort has also been made to research and present Jewish Law in a manner that is clear, mainstream, and comprehensive.

Guidebooks such as this do exist, but some are very brief and leave numerous questions unanswered, while others are very extensive and thus difficult to utilize when one is ill and when decisions must be made quickly. Therefore, the goal of this work is to examine issues comprehensively and in depth, but without going into excessive detail. Furthermore, since the primary target audience is the hospital patient, we have chosen to address only those issues that commonly arise in a hospital setting, and include relevant hospital policies and procedures. Deciding what to include and what to exclude from this guide was not easy, but based on thousands of patient encounters derived from my professional experience, and with the goal of making this guide comprehensive yet not burdensome, I hope that a happy medium has been achieved.
Methodology

While Jewish Law is very complex and there are numerous opinions about many issues, and variant customs prevail among different communities, this guide seeks to present a mainstream and reliable approach. This goal was achieved by following the rulings of one primary author, complemented by those of other widely accepted and local authorities where necessary. The school of thought that is followed in this guide has been Professor Abraham S. Abraham M.D., FRCP, author of the “Nishmat Avraham,” which has become the authoritative medically relevant commentary on the Code of Jewish Law, and “Lev Avraham,” his digest of rulings relating to patients and their caregivers, which is referenced extensively in this guide. Dr. Abraham quotes primarily from his great teachers, Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach zt”l and Rav Yehoshua Neuwirth Shlita (author of the “Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah”), as well as other leading authorities in Jewish Law. In addition to making careful use of his highly regarded books, Dr. Abraham graciously made himself available for clarifications and specific questions as they arose.

To produce this booklet, I studied each relevant chapter in “Lev Avraham,” as well as the appropriate related sources, and taught it in the original Hebrew to my weekly Halachah (Jewish Law) class at Young Israel of Century City, along with my English summary of each chapter. As a group we discussed the issues, how to present them most clearly, and other relevant questions that may arise. This booklet is the result of one year of these classes.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank those who regularly attended my weekly classes, and those who read and commented on early drafts of this guidebook, Steve and Rivkie Berger, Rabbi Daniel Coleman, Stuart Finder, PhD, Nathaniel Goldstein, Rabbi Drew Kaplan, Pam Kleinman, Adam and Rachel Lewis, Ben Lipman, Amanda Newstead, Dr. Ronnie Penn, Rabbi Dr. Edward Reichman, Elkie Reichman, Rabbi Jackie Siegel, Victoria Shaun, Natasha Somer, Allan Sternberg, and Rabbi David Wolkenfeld.

I am incredibly indebted to and appreciative of the wonderful local Rabbonim who have read and commented extensively on this entire booklet, Rabbi Gershon Bess, Rabbi Elazar Muskin, Rabbi Nachum Sauer, and Rabbi Yosef Shusterman.

A special note of gratitude is also due to Paula Van Gelder, about whom Rabbi Levi Meier PhD z”l wrote, “her expertise in writing is matched only by her kindness,” for not only carefully proof-reading and commenting on every word of this guide, but for assisting me in my research and clarification of the hospital’s policies.
I have the honor of serving as the Senior Rabbi and Manager of the Spiritual Care Department at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, where so many people, particularly Jonathan Schreiber and the department of Community Relations and Development, have been tremendously gracious, helpful and encouraging of this project.

I am privileged to be able to learn and teach Torah at Young Israel of Century City, under the guidance of Rabbi Elazar Muskin. I would like to thank the Shul and Rabbi Muskin for always being so warm, supportive, and interested in learning.

Last but not least, nothing I do would be possible without the incredible blessing of my wife, Lauren, and her tremendous self-sacrifice on behalf of our family and my learning.

Important Note

It is essential to recognize that this booklet is only a guide and an aid, and as such it is not particularly detailed or nuanced. The areas dealt with in this booklet are often very complicated, depend on numerous factors, and are sometimes matters of dispute amongst leading rabbis. Therefore, it is best to consult with a recognized authority in Jewish Law whenever possible as specific cases arise.

It is my fervent prayer and deep hope that this guide will serve to facilitate increased observance of Jewish Law and sensitivity to issues that arise in health care settings and that no one will make any mistakes in observing Jewish Law as a result of it. May this guide assist us in creating a Kiddush Hashem (sanctification of God’s name) wherever we go, and may the Torah learned herein lead to a Refuah Shelaimah (complete recovery), as we are taught, “Torah study brings healing for one’s body and bones both in this world and in the next” (Mishnah Berurah) 61:6).
I. Categories of Illness

Jewish Law recognizes five categories of sick patients, each with specific rulings relating to what may be done for that category of patient regarding various issues, such as Shabbat, Passover, fast days and ingesting forbidden foods.

In Case of Emergency

When a person’s life is in danger, it is an important Mitzvah (religious commandment) to do anything possible to assist them with great speed, as the Ohr Hachaim writes, “One who transgresses Shabbat for a dangerously sick person is not called a transgressor of Shabbat, but a guarder of Shabbat.”¹ One who hesitates and does not save the person is considered to have shed blood.²

A. Minor Ailments

1. The first category is called a “Maychush,” which describes someone who is only experiencing slight discomfort that is not severe enough to affect their entire body, such as a runny nose, dry skin or lips,³ mild cold or cough,⁴ minor joint or muscle pains, digestion problems,⁵ or a minor toothache.⁶ Jewish Law may generally not be transgressed for a patient in this category.⁷

2. The second category is called “Miktzat Choli” or “Mitztaer Harbe” which describes a patient with a minor illness, aches or pains, such as one who is sick and has an irritating cough, headache, or nasal inflammation, which does not affect the entire body or cause a person to be confined to a bed. Jewish Law may generally not be transgressed for a patient in this category either, though there are certain leniencies, such as the permissibility of asking someone who is not Jewish to perform a labor for them [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept] if the act is not prohibited by the Torah but only forbidden rabbinically (examples of rabbinic prohibitions are included in ch. II. Sec. A).⁸

B. Incapacitating and Life-Threatening Illnesses

3. The third category is known as “Choleh She'ain Bo Sakana,” which describes a patient who is ill, but not dangerously or seriously ill. Such a patient is

¹ Ohr Hachaim Exodus 31:13.
² Shulchan Aruch OH 328:2, 12-13.
³ Lev Avraham 1:1.
⁴ Shulchan Aruch OH 328:32.
⁵ Aruch Hashulchan OH 328:19.
⁶ Shulchan Aruch OH 328:32.
⁷ Ibid., 328:1; Mishnah Berurah 328:2-3; Lev Avraham 1:1.
⁸ Ibid., 307:5; Mishnah Berurah 328:52; Lev Avraham 1:2.
one who either has a generalized (systemic) illness, is bedridden (or in a state in which most people would become confined to bed), noticeably not functioning up to par due to pain or illness, but whose life is not in danger.\(^9\)

Examples of this category include:

- One whose whole body is affected by illness or pain, such as a moderate fever, influenza (flu), or severe migraine.\(^10\)
- A person not yet suffering from, but prone to developing an illness, such as acute asthma, unless they are receiving preventive treatment.\(^11\)
- One who suffers from chronic debilitating arthritis pain.\(^12\)
- One who suffers from migraine headaches or mild clinical depression.\(^13\)
- A pregnant woman suffering from non-life-threatening complications (e.g., lower back pain).\(^14\)
- A woman who has given birth in the past thirty days without any known problems or is experiencing non-life-threatening postpartum complications, in which case this may even apply beyond thirty days after the birth.\(^15\)
- A person with an eye infection, however mild.\(^16\)
- A child up to age nine or ten who has discomfort or even only a mild illness.\(^17\)

Such a patient should carefully follow all of their doctor’s instructions. Even if it is not certain if they are sick enough to fall in this category, they should be considered to be in this category and are allowed its following leniencies.\(^18\)

- A patient in this category may request someone who is not Jewish to carry out whatever is necessary for treatment, even if it will violate a Torah prohibition,\(^19\) if that specific treatment is needed to treat the person immediately on Shabbat.\(^20\)
- Additionally, a Jewish person may do whatever is necessary for the care of such a patient if it involves a rabbinical prohibition (or even a Torah prohibition in a case of great need), if it is done in a manner differing from the way it is ordinarily done [see \textbf{ch. II. Sec. B}, for an explanation of this concept].\(^21\)
Furthermore, although taking medicine and therapeutic treatments are forbidden on Shabbat, a patient in this category may take medicine in the normal manner.\textsuperscript{22}

4. The fourth category is where there is a danger of losing or causing permanent significant damage to a limb (“\textit{Sakanat Eiver}”). Someone who is not Jewish may transgress a Torah prohibition for their sake, or a Jewish person may transgress a Torah prohibition provided they deviate from the normal weekday manner (“\textit{Shinui}”), or a rabbinic prohibition even in the normal manner.\textsuperscript{23} However, if there is a concern that this damage to a limb may lead to more serious danger to the individual, all prohibitions may be transgressed.\textsuperscript{24} Similarly, to save an eye, or even to prevent blindness (according to some opinions), all prohibitions may be transgressed.\textsuperscript{25}

5a. The fifth category is a “\textit{Choleh Sheyaish Bo Sakana}” which describes a patient who is seriously or dangerously ill, suffering from a \textbf{potentially} life-threatening condition, even if it is \textbf{not certainly} life-threatening,\textsuperscript{26} as long as a doctor agrees that there is some danger.\textsuperscript{27}

5b. This category includes one whose life is currently not in danger, but if untreated could develop a life-threatening complication, such as an elderly person who has the flu, an infant with a fever, or a diabetic in need of insulin.\textsuperscript{28} Moreover, even if the patient is in the dying process, prohibitions may be transgressed in order to keep them alive for a few extra minutes.\textsuperscript{29}

5c. Many examples and specifics will be discussed below, but some examples of patients who are considered to be in life-threatening danger include:

- One who has a serious heart condition, diabetes, substantially elevated blood pressure, kidney disease, severe depression,\textsuperscript{30} or any other serious condition which may potentially be life-threatening.\textsuperscript{31}

- Someone with a potentially life-threatening infection may take antibiotics even if it entails violating a Torah prohibition.\textsuperscript{32}

- A pregnant woman whose life is in danger (e.g., blood clotting disorder, toxemia), or who is in active labor, or who is in danger of having a miscarriage.\textsuperscript{33}

\textsuperscript{22} Shulchan Aruch OH 328:37 Rema; Mishnah Berurah 328:121.
\textsuperscript{23} Lev Avraham 1:20; Lev Avraham 1:3 based on Shulchan Aruch OH 328:17 & Mishnah Berurah 328:57.
\textsuperscript{24} Lev Avraham 1:3.
\textsuperscript{25} Ibid.; Shulchan Aruch OH 328:9 & Mishnah Berurah 328:22.
\textsuperscript{26} Lev Avraham 1:4; Shulchan Aruch OH 328:10-14.
\textsuperscript{27} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32 fn. 25.
\textsuperscript{28} Mishnah Berurah 328:17; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:8; Lev Avraham 1:4.
\textsuperscript{29} Shulchan Aruch OH 329:4.
\textsuperscript{30} Igrot Moshe EH1:65.
\textsuperscript{32} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{33} Ibid.
• Very high fever (determined by how the patient feels, but is generally considered very high at approximately 102 degrees for an adult, and even lower for a child who feels extremely uncomfortable).³⁴

5d. If actual or possible danger to such a patient’s life is imminent, one must do everything necessary to save the patient’s life as speedily as possible without asking anyone else to do it for them, and on Shabbat it may be done exactly as one would were it not Shabbat.³⁵ All instructions given by the doctor should be carefully followed, including taking the medication for the prescribed number of days, even though the symptoms may have subsided.³⁶

³⁴ Igrot Moshe OH:129 based on Shulchan Aruch OH 328:7.
³⁵ Shulchan Aruch OH 328:2, 5.
Shabbat is the Jewish Sabbath. It commemorates God’s resting from the creation of the universe on the seventh day and is observed by emulating God through ceasing various activities, resulting in a restful and spiritual atmosphere. Shabbat begins before sundown every Friday night and lasts until well after sundown on Saturday night. Careful and precise fidelity to the intricate rules of Shabbat is of tremendous importance to traditionally observant Jews.

II. Shabbat

A. Dangerously Ill Patient on Shabbat/Holidays – General Principles

1. Whenever there is any danger to human life, even if it is only possible danger, one is required to set aside the laws of Shabbat and holidays to do everything that is necessary for the benefit of the sick person. The Mishnah Berurah states that “If a person is overly pious and fears to desecrate Shabbat for such a patient without first asking a Torah authority, they may be guilty of bloodshed… If the patient is afraid to have people transgress Shabbat for their sake, one must compel them to allow it to be done and set their mind at rest by explaining that the piety of refraining from Shabbat desecration in such a case is mere folly.”

2a. When Shabbat is violated in order to save a person’s life, it may be done either by the person whose life is in danger or by someone else who is trying to help. If the process of attending to a patient will not be slowed down at all by performing an action with a “Shinui” (obvious change from the normal manner, see ch. II. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept) or asking someone who is not Jewish to do it for them [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept], such would be preferable. Furthermore, if it is certain that there is no imminent danger to life in taking time to consult a competent authority in Jewish Law, this should be done.

2b. However, if any of this will cause the process to be delayed at all or done imperfectly, in a case where this could put the patient in danger, the action should be done right away by any person – including a Jewish person, and in a normal way, in which case the Mishnah Berurah writes, “even if it is doubtful as to whether or not the action will save life but there is definite danger to life involved, whoever is brisk in performing the action with their own hands is worthy of praise, even though they will thereby desecrate Shabbat.”

37 Shulchan Aruch, OH 328:2 & Mishnah Berurah 328:6; Rambam, Hilchot Shabbat 2:1. This includes violating Torah prohibitions.
38 Mishnah Berurah 328:6
40 Shulchan Aruch OH, 328:14; Lev Avraham 1:5. However, the Rambam, Hilchot Shabbat 2:3 and the Shulchan Aruch OH, 328:12 rule that we should not ask anyone else to perform the forbidden Shabbat labor, but a Jew must in fact desecrate Shabbat for the sake of the patient.
42 Mishnah Berurah 328:37.
2c. The above applies only to the actual needs of the patient. However procedures which are not absolutely necessary, such as taking a patient’s temperature, filling out a report, or turning off a light so a patient can sleep better, are ideally done by someone who is not Jewish [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept] or through a “Shinui” (obvious change from the normal manner - see ch. II. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept).43

2d. However, if there is an important need for something, even if not directly related to the patient’s healing, but to reducing the patient’s suffering or strengthening their body, Shabbat should be violated in order to do this.44

3. The decision to suspend the laws of Shabbat on behalf of a patient should be made based on what one would do if it was not Shabbat. If the patient was so seriously ill that they would certainly go to the emergency room or call the doctor immediately on a weekday, even in the middle of the night, the same should be done on Shabbat. However, if one would find it medically prudent to wait a few hours or until the next day on a weekday, they must also wait until after Shabbat.45 On the other hand, even if one would normally attend to their illness right away, but it is clear to them or their doctor that they can safely wait until Shabbat is over to obtain treatments that violate Torah prohibitions without any danger, they should wait until after Shabbat concludes.46 In such a case, however, it may be permissible to violate rabbinic prohibitions.

4a. Some examples of rabbinically forbidden Shabbat actions include:47

- “Muktzeh” the restrictions on moving certain objects, such as money, electronics, or writing utensils.
- Re-heating solid food containing no liquid on a pre-lit stove.
- A left handed person writing with their right hand or a right handed person writing with their left hand [see ch. II. Sec. J, for an explanation of this concept].
- Asking someone who is not Jewish to violate any Torah level prohibition [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept].
- Preparing on Shabbat for a weekday.

4b. Some examples of activities forbidden by the Torah on Shabbat include:48

- Starting and driving a car.
- Adjusting the thermostat so that the furnace goes on immediately.

43 Nishmat Avraham OH 328:1 Intro (2).
44 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:22.
46 Mishnah Berurah 328:15 & 46.
47 Nachman Schachter, Guide to Halachos, edited and approved by Rabbi Moshe Heinemann, (Feldheim publishers), 35.
48 Ibid.
• Turning on an electric or gas oven.
• Boiling a liquid.
• Writing with a pencil or pen.

5. A patient who has an incapacitating illness, but it is certainly not life-threatening, may instruct somebody who is not Jewish to care for them, even if it involves setting aside a Torah prohibition. A Jew may only perform an act which is rabbinically prohibited for such a patient, if possible doing so in a different manner than usual.

Treatment Options

6. The book “Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah” states, “A person whose life is regarded as being in danger should be given any treatment required for their recovery, or to prevent worsening of their condition, even if: a) there is only a possibility that their condition will worsen, b) the treatment involves the violation of Shabbat by transgressing a Torah prohibition, c) it is not certain that the action undertaken will indeed help remove or minimize the danger.”

7. Even if there are treatment options that do not involve any Shabbat violations, a patient whose life may be in danger may still suspend the Shabbat laws to pursue treatment if it is more effective than the options that do not involve Shabbat violation. For example:

• A patient may call a doctor outside of the hospital, despite the fact that it will involve Shabbat violation, if the doctor who lives far away is more competent, or has been treating the patient regularly and knows the medical history better, or the patient prefers their own private doctor, assuming they will get more devoted attention.

• If there is a need for a light to be on in the room of a dangerously ill patient, even if light can be brought in from another room, one may be turned on if their current light is not bright enough, or the time delay will endanger the patient.

49 Shulchan Aruch, OH 328:17, Mishnah Berurah 328:47.
50 Ibid., Mishnah Berurah 328:50 & 54.
51 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:18.
52 Ibid., 32:27.
53 Ibid., 32:38; Lev Avraham 13:14. This does not apply if the only concern is saving money.
54 Ibid., 32:65.
Fetus & End-of-Life Patient

8. These rules apply equally to an adult, a child, a fetus in any stage of gestation, or a child who will live for only a limited time.55

9. These rules also apply to a person who is near the end of life, even if the dying process has begun. The laws of Shabbat and holidays are still suspended in order to help a person live just a short while longer56 or even to just temporarily relieve suffering.57

Psychiatric, Dementia, or Suicidal Patient

10. The same rules governing one who has a physical infirmity apply to one whose life is in danger – or presents a danger to other people’s lives - due to a psychiatric condition,58 or is in danger as a result of a condition such as Alzheimer’s disease.59 So too, Shabbat must be transgressed to treat a patient who has attempted suicide and thus places him or herself in danger.60

B. “Shinui” Doing a Shabbat labor in an awkward, backhanded manner

The concept known as “Shinui,” that was previously mentioned, means performing an action forbidden on Shabbat in a manner that is irregular and different from the way it is normally done during the week.

The Shabbat prohibitions are based on labors that were performed in the construction of the Tabernacle (Mishkan), as described in the Torah. Since these were skilled labors, an action done with this awkward or backhanded manner does not conform to the character of the precise actions used in the construction of the Tabernacle. Therefore, when one does an action in such an abnormal manner, it is still forbidden, but the level of prohibition is downgraded. If the action is a Torah prohibition, doing it in this abnormal manner reduces it to a rabbinic prohibition. If the action is already a rabbinic prohibition, it becomes a less severe rabbinic prohibition. The only way to actually make a forbidden action permitted is when it is combined with other mitigating factors. For example, it is permitted to violate a rabbinic Shabbat prohibition in an abnormal manner to assist an individual with an illness which causes one to be bedridden but is non-life-threatening. If the person’s life is in danger, one may even override a Torah prohibition by doing it in an abnormal manner (though if this will be at all detrimental to the care provided to the seriously ill patient, then the act must be done in the normal manner).

56 Shulchan Aruch OH, 329:4; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:2.
57 Lev Avraham 13:5.
59 Tzitz Eliezer 8:15 (3:1)
60 Igrot Moshe OH1:127.
Further examples include turning on a light switch in a case where this must be done on Shabbat. One should not turn it on with their fingers in the normal manner, but must instead use something unusual and awkward, such as an elbow.\(^\text{61}\) Simply using the left hand in place of the right hand is not a sufficient deviation from the normal way of doing things for most Shabbat violations, with the notable exception of writing.\(^\text{62}\)

C. “Amira L’Akum” Asking someone who is not Jewish to violate Shabbat

Another circumstance in which actions forbidden on Shabbat can be permitted in certain situations is when one asks someone who is not Jewish to do the action for them. This principle should by no means be misinterpreted as any inference of superiority or inferiority between religions. Rather, it is a simple acknowledgement of the fact that people who are not Jewish are not obligated in the laws of the Jewish Sabbath and may, therefore, be helpful to someone who is Jewish by doing things on their behalf. Essentially, this is little different from the myriad ways in which people, of all races and religions, help each other in all spheres of life – including help that allows another to observe his or her religion's demands. Indeed, Judaism obligates us to treat people who are not Jewish with kindness and respect and to never behave in a manner towards them that could be perceived as rude or impolite.

It should be pointed out that generally speaking the Sages prohibited a Jew from asking someone who is not Jewish to perform a forbidden Sabbath act on behalf of a Jew.\(^\text{63}\) These laws are very complex and detailed, but for our purposes we may simply point out that the Sages waived the restriction of asking someone who is not Jewish in certain specific circumstances, such as to assist in the care of a person who is ill (as detailed above in chapter 1).\(^\text{64}\)

Normally, one who is not Jewish may only do certain forbidden Shabbat labors for a Jew if the non-Jew acts completely on his or her own accord or one hints to the non-Jew in an indirect manner. However, in a case of a person who is ill, even not dangerously so, in most situations one need not hint but may directly ask a person who is not Jewish to do any action for them, and the prohibition to benefit from it is set aside.\(^\text{65}\)

D. Use of Electricity

One of the forbidden activities on Shabbat is the use of electricity. Therefore, when it is not medically necessary, traditionally observant Jews will refrain from directly activating or deactivating any sort of electric devices, such as lights, televisions, call buttons, or elevators.

\(^{61}\) Shulchan Shlomo 328:28 (2).
\(^{62}\) Chayei Adam, Hilchot Shabbat 9:2.
\(^{63}\) Rambam, Mishnah Torah Hilchot Shabbat 6:1.
\(^{64}\) Shulchan Aruch OH 307:5 & Mishnah Berurah 21.
\(^{65}\) Shulchan Shlomo, Erchei Refuah, vol. 1, 47.
Turning Lights On and Off

1a. When there is a sick person whose care may require light, one should turn on a light before Shabbat (preferably just outside their room), so that it will be possible to see well enough to attend to their needs during the night without turning on a light.

1b. However, one may turn on a light on Shabbat for a sick person whose life is in danger, when there is nobody who is not Jewish available:

- Whenever darkness or poor light hinders one in doing what is required to care for them, or
- So that they will not be afraid of the dark, or
- To make them feel that they are being taken care of and to avoid their having the impression that they are being neglected or not receiving proper attention, an impression which is liable to have a detrimental effect on their state of health.

2. One may not turn on a light for a patient who has a non-life-threatening serious illness, even in an abnormal manner, though one may ask someone who is not Jewish to turn on a light for such a patient [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept]. However, a Jew may turn the light off in an abnormal manner (though it is also preferable for someone who is not Jewish to turn the light off, if possible).

How to Turn the Light On

3. If one has to turn on the light for a dangerously ill person, one should do so in a manner different from that which one would adopt on an ordinary day of the week, so long as doing so does not delay or compromise in any way the patient’s care. For example, one should switch on the electric light with one’s elbow, and not with the front of one’s hand.

Bringing a Light That is Already On

4a. If there is a need for a light in the room of a dangerously ill person, and there is a portable source of light with a long enough cord on in another room, one should bring in that lamp (if they can keep it turned on), rather than turn on another light (unless there is an immediate need for light in which case it should be turned on right away).

This is because one should, to whatever extent possible, minimize the degree to which one violates Shabbat, and transferring the lamp from one room to

---

66 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:63.
67 Ibid.
69 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:63.
another is an infringement of only the rabbinical prohibition against moving a Muktzeh object, whereas turning on a light may involve Torah prohibitions.\textsuperscript{70}

4b. One should turn on a light in the patient's room and not bring a lamp from another room if the light emitted by the other lamp is not sufficient for one's purposes or time is pressing and any delay is liable to endanger the patient.\textsuperscript{71}

4c. Where necessary, one may turn a light on for a dangerously ill patient even when there is a lamp already on in a neighboring area, if making the lamp available to the patient will cause the neighbor considerable hardship and inconvenience.

An example of this occurs when the neighbor is asleep and one would have to wake him or her.\textsuperscript{72}

Minimizing the Number of Lights Turned On

5. In order to minimize the amount of transgression, the effect achieved by any forbidden activity which must be performed should be limited (as much as possible) to only what is essential for the person who is dangerously ill.

- Therefore, if a) one switch will turn on only one bulb, whereas another will turn on more than one, and b) all that is required is the light of only one bulb, then one should operate the switch that turns on only one bulb.\textsuperscript{73}

- Similarly, when there are two bulbs, one large and one small, that one could turn on for the purposes of a dangerously ill person, but either one of them alone would suffice to serve the patient's needs, it is better to turn on the smaller bulb in order not to ignite excess filament.\textsuperscript{74}

Type of Light

6. Turning on an incandescent light bulb on Shabbat is considered a Torah prohibition. Many fluorescent lights now contain starters which heat up when turned on and are also considered a Torah prohibition, but since it is a smaller wire than those in an incandescent bulb, if one has to choose between the two, it is preferable to turn on a fluorescent bulb instead of an incandescent one.\textsuperscript{75} LCD, LED, and neon lights do not contain metal filaments and their use does not violate a Torah prohibition. When a light must be turned on for a dangerously ill person, such lights should thus be chosen if there is an option. For example, writing on a computer screen is preferred to writing with ink, and using a phone system with LED lights is better than using one with a bulb and light-up buttons.\textsuperscript{76}

\textsuperscript{70} Ibid., 32:65.
\textsuperscript{71} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{72} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{73} Ibid., 32:66.
\textsuperscript{74} Ibid., 32:67.
\textsuperscript{75} Ibid., 32:67 fn. 178.
\textsuperscript{76} Rabbi Mechel Handler & Rabbi Dovid Weinberger, Madrich L’chevra Hatzalah, (Feldheim Publishers, 2008), 41-42.
Using a Light Turned On for a Sick Person

7. A light which was turned on during Shabbat for a person whose life is in danger may also be used by other people since it was turned on in a permissible manner.\footnote{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:69.}

Turning Off the Light

8. One may turn off a light on Shabbat to enable a dangerously ill person, for whom sleep is beneficial, to go to sleep, but one may do so only if it is not possible to:
   - Safely cover, or move the light out of the room without extinguishing it.
   - Reset a timer (which has been operating since before Shabbat) to turn off the light after a short interval.

   If possible, one should turn the light off in a way which one would not use on a weekday, for instance by switching off the electricity with one’s elbow rather than with one’s hand, or asking someone who is not Jewish to do it [see ch. II. Sec. B & C, for an explanation of these concepts].\footnote{Ibid. 32:70; Shulchan Aruch, OH 178:1, Mishnah Berurah 178:2; Shulchan Aruch, OH 328:12 Rema.}

9. It is preferable to reduce the light through a dimmer, and not completely shut it off, if possible.\footnote{Lev Avraham 13:29.}

Refrigerator Lights

10a. Before Shabbat, one should disconnect or remove the internal light of a refrigerator one is going to use on Shabbat, so as to prevent its being automatically turned on by the opening of the door.\footnote{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:71.} Nevertheless, even if one has not done so, one may open the refrigerator on Shabbat (ideally in an abnormal manner) to remove whatever one needs for a patient whose life is in danger, despite the fact that this will cause the light inside to turn on. It would be preferable to ask someone who is not Jewish to open the door, if possible.\footnote{Lev Avraham 13:32.}

10b. While the door is open, one may also make use of the opportunity to take out food for other people who are not dangerously ill.

10c. A Jew should not close the door of a refrigerator whose internal light will thereby be extinguished, unless all of the following conditions are met:
   - There are still things in the refrigerator which are, or may possibly be, required on that Shabbat, or even after Shabbat, for a person whose life is in danger;
• The items one has in the refrigerator for the patient will spoil if the door is not closed;
• One will not be able to obtain other such items in their place;
• There is no other place where these items could be kept (e.g., in a neighbor’s refrigerator).\textsuperscript{82}

10d. It is permitted to ask someone who is not Jewish to open the refrigerator, even though the light will turn on, even for the needs of a person who is merely suffering from a minor ailment.\textsuperscript{83}

11. In a case where one does close the refrigerator door, if they may have to open it again for the patient on that Shabbat, one should, before closing the door, disconnect or remove the internal bulb (and, if possible, one should do so in a manner one would not normally adopt). This will prevent the bulb from being turned on and off each time one has to open and close the door. \textsuperscript{84}

Electric Warming Blankets

12. A patient who is dangerously ill may use an electric warming blanket if a regular blanket will not suffice. It should ideally be turned on by someone who is not Jewish, or if it must be done by a Jew it should be turned on in an abnormal manner.\textsuperscript{85} It is also advisable to cover its electricity regulator as a reminder, so that no one will adjust the temperature unnecessarily.\textsuperscript{86}

Heater and Air Conditioning

13a. Since cold is liable to harm a person who is dangerously ill, if the patient is cold and somebody who is not Jewish is unavailable, a Jew may turn a heater on for them if it warms the patient better than simply piling on additional blankets would do. When possible, one should vary their normal method of turning on the heater [see ch. II. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept].\textsuperscript{87}

13b. If the heat becomes oppressive for a dangerously ill patient, one may turn it down. If this is insufficient and it is not possible to remove the heater from the room or easily transfer the patient to a cooler room, one may turn the heater off.\textsuperscript{88}

14a. On a day when heat is oppressive and burdensome to a dangerously ill patient, if somebody who is not Jewish is unavailable, one may activate the air conditioning or a fan. If it becomes too cold, it may be turned off unless the air can be faced in a different direction or the patient may easily be transferred elsewhere.\textsuperscript{89}

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{82} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:71.
  \item \textsuperscript{83} Igrot Moshe OH\textsuperscript{2}:68.
  \item \textsuperscript{84} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:71.
  \item \textsuperscript{85} Lev Avraham 13:30.
  \item \textsuperscript{86} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 38:7.
  \item \textsuperscript{87} Ibid., 32:83.
  \item \textsuperscript{88} Ibid., 32:85.
  \item \textsuperscript{89} Ibid., 32:86.
\end{itemize}
14b. For both the heater and air conditioner, when possible, one should vary their normal method of adjusting the temperature or turning off the mechanism. For example, one should use their elbows or wrists instead of their hands [see ch. II. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept].

15. When the temperature is very uncomfortable, even if the patient is not dangerously ill, one may ask someone who is not Jewish to turn on the heat or air conditioning for them.

- Although individual refrigerators are not permitted in patient rooms in the Saperstein Critical Care Tower, one may utilize a portable cooler, which may be obtained by contacting the Spiritual Care office at (310) 423 5550.

- When one adjusts the thermostat in the Cedars-Sinai patient rooms, nothing is actually started or stopped. Rather, depending on the room, a damper opens or closes via electricity or pneumatics (air), or a valve is activated to adjust the amount of flow of air or water. The compressor is never stopped or started, but is always running to keep the air circulating. Moving an air damper redirects the air from somewhere else, or increases/decreases it, but does not start or stop a new function.

E. Elevators, Electric Doors and Automatic Sensors on Shabbat

1a. Some authorities do not permit entering an elevator on Shabbat, even an automatic “Sabbath elevator,” or together with someone who is not Jewish (except to care for someone who is dangerously ill).92

1b. However, Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah states: “It is forbidden to use an elevator on Shabbat or Yom Tov, unless all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

1) The elevator operates automatically, that is to say it goes up and down by itself at fixed intervals or continuously;
2) The elevator stops by itself at the required floors, without the need for any human interference, whether by way of pressing buttons or otherwise;
3) The doors open and close automatically, likewise without the need for any human interference;
4) No prohibited act is involved in entering or leaving the elevator.”93

There are, however, eminent authorities who allow the use of an elevator (subject to the above conditions) even for descending.”94

2. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah continues, “one should not touch the electrically operated door of an elevator, either with one’s hand or with

90 Ibid.
91 Ibid., 38:8-9.
92 Chelkat Yaakov 3:137.
94 Ibid.
one’s body, when it is about to close.”95 One should be especially careful not to block the elevator doorway or interfere with these doors when they are closing. One should therefore enter and exit the elevator as soon as the door opens, or as others do so as well, so as not to affect the electric eye.96

3. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah continues, “There are some who permit the use of an elevator only for ascending, and not for descending [for reasons outlined in paragraph 4], even

a) When all the above conditions are fulfilled or
b) When the elevator is being operated by a non-Jew for their own purposes.

4. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah continues, “1. The objections to descending in an elevator on Shabbat or Yom Tov stem from the way in which most modern elevators operate. The weight of the passengers can:

a) cause the elevator to descend more quickly and
b) affect the amount of current passing through the motor.97

2. It is argued that a Torah prohibition (and not just a rabbinical restriction) is involved when lights are turned on or powered as a result of these factors.

3. This is of course disputed by the eminent authorities who permit the use of an elevator for descending (subject to the conditions set out in the previous paragraphs).”98

5. The English edition of the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah notes that, “Due to the complicated technicalities involved and the differences of opinion among the authorities, one would be well advised not to use an elevator on Shabbat or Yom Tov without consulting a properly qualified rabbi.”99 That said, it should be noted that, “although many Orthodox Jews do not use automatic elevators at all, they are technically permitted.”100 As Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach concludes, “It is permitted to ride in a descending elevator [in addition to an ascending elevator] even if it is not a case of loss… so one should not rebuke those who are lenient and ride on a descending automatic elevator.”101 Still, based on the above, it may be best to avoid using a descending automatic elevator, except when it is absolutely necessary.

---

95 Ibid.
96 B’shivilei Beit Harefuah, 20:5.
97 This is based on the assumption that the weight of a passenger riding on an elevator assists the elevator’s motor in the descent of the elevator, as Rav Levi Yitzchak Halperin, of the Institute for Science and Halacha in Jerusalem writes, “If the passenger is responsible for the descent, he is responsible also for illuminating the various lamps, connecting the door motor, the brakes, and numerous other electric circuits which are activated during the descent” (Maaliot Bishabbat, p. 11 of the English section). Furthermore, “When the car is descending with a heavy passenger load it may speed up to a point where the counter-force developed in the motor is greater than the force of the electric power station. When this condition occurs, the motor, rather than aiding the descent, is used to brake the car thus preventing dangerous over speed. When the speed of a motor increases to a value above that for which it was designed, it automatically becomes a generator. Instead of consuming electrical energy it generates power which is fed into the electric company lines to be used by consumers in the immediate vicinity” (Maaliot Bishabbat, p. 19 of the English section). The Cedars-Sinai elevators, however, use “Direct Current” motors and do not have provisions to regenerate back to the house alternating current. The elevators in the Saperstein Building use “Alternating Current” motors but utilize a bank of “Dynamic Braking” resistors to dissipate the extra power when the elevator slows down.
98 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 23:50 (English edition), see 23:58 in the Hebrew edition and footnotes 164 & 166 for Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach’s detailed explanation of why entering such an elevator is permitted.
100 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 23:58.
101 Ibid., 23 fn. 166.
6. One who is dangerously ill may be transported in a regular elevator on Shabbat, and a healthy person may even accompany them, if they are needed. They may also push the buttons to summon the elevator for the dangerously ill patient, even if it causes a light to illuminate, though it should be pressed in an abnormal manner. 102

7. A Jew may not, however, summon an elevator for a patient who is not dangerously ill, though one may ask someone who is not Jewish to summon the elevator by pushing the buttons if the patient needs to be transported for the sake of their treatment. 103

8. A visitor who must use an elevator, and is unable to use an automatic “Sabbath elevator,” should ideally let someone who is not Jewish press the button to summon the elevator or select the floor level (though the same concerns regarding descending, affecting the doors, etc. would be relevant in such a case as well). 104 They should either hint at which floor they need pressed, hoping someone who is not Jewish will press the button for them, or they must simply exit at the closest floor to their destination and take the stairs, if possible.

9. If no one is around to assist, in a case of great need, one may press the button themselves in an unusual manner, i.e. using their knuckles or two hands. 105

---

- At Cedars-Sinai the Sabbath elevators are located in the North Tower (elevator #13), and in the Saperstein Critical Care Tower (#38).
- The Sabbath elevators are programmed to stop automatically at every floor of the Medical Center on the Sabbath and holidays, allowing people to step in and out without having to press any buttons. The designated elevator stops at all floors and operates the doors, lights and sounds regardless if there are passengers. The only action that a passenger can be responsible for on these elevators is door reversal. The doors are set to remain open for 8 seconds and if they start to close and one of the many detection beams is broken by a person’s presence, the doors will reopen as a safety precaution.
- The Cedars-Sinai “Sabbath Elevator” simply functions as a typical elevator, except that when in Sabbath Operation mode, car calls are automatically generated each time the elevator cancels the prior call, and the car thus gradually makes its way up and down the building, stopping at every floor along the way.
- The elevators at Cedars-Sinai have approximately 45% overbalance, (the counterweight is thus 45% heavier than an empty car). A loaded elevator uses less energy in its decent because less power is required to pick up the counterweight. The capacity of the Cedars-Sinai Sabbath elevators is 3500lbs. 45% of 3500 is 1575lbs. (10 people weighing 157.5 pounds).

---

102 Lev Avraham 13:130.
103 Ibid., 13:131.
104 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 23:59.
105 Madrich L’chevra Hatzalah, 144.
Until the total weight of a loaded elevator gets past the balanced load, the machine is actually driving the cab down. Computers monitor and control the speed of these elevators. However, the weight of passengers in the cab is monitored and plays a role in how much torque is applied when an elevator starts out. Once the elevator starts its run, computers will adjust the speed accordingly based on feedback from the machine, regardless of the weight. The weight of a passenger riding on an elevator assists the elevator’s motor in the descent of the elevator, but an empty descending elevator uses more power than a loaded elevator for the above reasons. The elevator is its most efficient when it reaches that magical balanced load mark.

- When a person enters a Cedars-Sinai elevator, “load transducers” measure the weight inside the cab in order to provide enough torque on the motor to keep the elevator under control when the brake is activated and when the elevator first starts. Although this process increases electrical currents, as the presence of a person causes a change in how the elevator reacts to a load, since the elevators are “solid state” and there are no relays or switches in that portion of the circuitry, no new circuits are made. This is what is known as a “closed loop” system, meaning there are no open circuits.

- It is possible to take stairs to every floor of the main building, first from the street to the Plaza Level, then another staircase from the Plaza to all of the patient floors.

- The stairways of the Saperstein Critical Care Tower are locked, precluding travel between floors. However, the Cedars-Sinai security officers are trained to assist visitors who prefer to take the stairs by meeting them at their desired floor to open the door. People may avail themselves of this service by asking the security officer at the front desk to assist them.

- Locations of these elevators and staircases are detailed in the “Sabbath Observance” map at the end of this booklet.

10. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes, “One may use automatic escalators and moving sidewalks that operate continuously.”106

11a. Many doors at Cedars-Sinai can be manually opened. Some, however, are automatic electric-eye doors. One should always attempt to use only the manually opened doors, as the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes, “It is prohibited, both on Shabbat and Yom Tov, to pass through an electrically operated automatic door which is opened by means of a photo-electric cell or when one treads on the floor in front of it. In both of these cases, by approaching the door, one would be activating an electrical current.”107

---

106 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 23:52.
107 Ibid., 23:53.
If one is in an area where their only choice is to use an automatic door and one needs to enter for the sake of a patient, one should:

- ask someone who is not Jewish to open the doors for them [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept], or
- enter together at the same time as someone who is not Jewish, or
- ask someone who does not know that their entering will cause the door to open, so that it will be considered “Mitasek” (when a person intends to do a permitted act, and accidentally does a prohibited act).

If none of these options are possible, such as in the middle of the night, one may cause the door to open in an abnormal manner, such as by extending one’s foot or arm instead of one’s entire body.

It is permitted to pass in front of a closed circuit video camera on Shabbat, such as a security camera, because the video is only recorded temporarily (and it is thus not considered permanent writing) and it is not intended even though it is a “Psik Reisha” (an inevitable consequence).

Water faucets that flow automatically when triggered by an electric sensor that recognizes hands placed beneath them may not be used on Shabbat unless it is a case of danger to the patient. One must find a manually operated faucet on Shabbat.

Restrooms that are equipped with lights that automatically illuminate and function when a person enters, and turn off when a person exits, should not be used on Shabbat. However, in a case of great need, if it is impossible to find an alternative restroom, one may use such a restroom on Shabbat. If possible, one should insure that there is a light that remains on in the room throughout Shabbat or if this is not possible, leave the door slightly ajar so that they are not getting benefit solely from the light that was initiated by their action on Shabbat.

There are often places in a hospital where automatic functions, such as doors, are neutralized but the electric sensor is still functioning (i.e., it may blink or otherwise register one’s motion, but does not result in an action, such as opening a door or turning on a light). A person may nevertheless go through an area that may trigger such a sensor, particularly if they don’t know that it is taking place.

---

109 Ibid., 198; See also Lev Avraham 13:132, who permits passing through an electric door in the normal manner if there is no other option and the need is great.
110 Lev Avraham 13:139; Rav Moshe Feinstein, in Techumim vol. 14, 433.
111 B'Shvilei Beit Harefuah, 20:8.
112 Ibid., 20:9. This is based on the great need of this particular situation and human dignity considerations of one who must use the restroom, coupled with the possibility that causing a light to turn on via an electric eye is not the normal manner of turning on a light.
113 Ibid. By doing this, the action falls into the category of a “Psik Reisha D’lo Nicha Lei” (an inevitable consequence that one does not need).
• Although the main entrance to the Saperstein Critical Care Tower is an electric door, there is a manually opened Sabbath entrance about 100 feet to the west (to the left when one is facing the Saperstein building standing on the outside) of the main entrance which is open every Friday night from 6-9pm, and Saturdays from 10 am - 9 pm (see map at the end of this booklet).

• It is possible to get to every area of the Medical Center via manually operated, non-electric doors, as detailed in the Cedars-Sinai Campus Map for Sabbath Observance at the back of this booklet.

• The most complicated areas of the Medical Center are the doors leading to the patient rooms on each unit of the Saperstein Critical Care Tower. Safety sensors pick up anything within six inches from the face of the doors and will automatically re-open these doors if they sense anything in their way as they are closing. Even while they are fully open, walking through the door resets the timer on the safety zone for the door opening.

F. The Use of a Telephone

1. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes: “When one has to telephone a doctor to come, or for instructions as to treatment, one should, where possible, remove the receiver in a manner which differs from that which one would use on an ordinary day of the week. For instance, one should displace the receiver with one’s elbow or wrist, or in the event that this is not possible, one should lift it off its rest together with another person, or if nobody else is there, one should take it off with both hands at the same time.”115

2. “When speaking on the telephone for the purposes of a dangerously ill patient, one is not obligated to be sparing in words, weighing each word to see whether it is required, but one should say everything that has to be said concerning the patient. One may even end the conversation with some such phrases as, “Good-bye,” or “Thank you very much.” However, one should certainly not talk about matters which have no connection with the patient or their treatment.”116

3. “At the end of the conversation, one should not replace the receiver on its rest, except in the following circumstances, when it must be replaced:

1) If one may need to take an incoming call that Shabbat on the same instrument or line for the purpose of saving human life.

2) If there is reason to suppose the number one has called may be needed again that Shabbat in connection with saving human life.”117

115 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:40.
116 Ibid., 32:41.
117 Ibid., 32:42.
4. A cordless telephone should not be returned to its base, which would cause its battery to be charged, unless that phone may be needed again on Shabbat for life-saving purposes and, if it were not returned to its base, it would not be usable again that Shabbat.

5. Because one must always try to select the lesser violation in non-life-threatening situations and attempt to minimize the extent and severity of Shabbat transgression, if one has to use an electrical device, they should choose one that does not produce light or heat. Using a phone system with LED lights is better than using one with bulbs and light-up buttons.

6. Although it used to be considered completely forbidden to use a telephone for the sake of a non-seriously ill patient, since most phones today use neon or LED lights which are not considered “fire,” one may use a telephone for a patient with a non-life-threatening illness when necessary, though it should be done in an abnormal manner.

7a. One may call the family of a patient who is dangerously ill if the patient arrives at the hospital on Shabbat unconscious and in need of someone to direct their care and ensure that they have the appropriate doctors, treatment and guidance. If the patient is lonely or has some other concern that they would like to notify others about via telephone, a call may not be made unless it can reasonably be seen as a life-saving matter (or preventing the patient's condition from deteriorating into a life-threatening condition).

7b. A patient (or their visitor) may ask someone who is not Jewish to call someone if the patient’s situation is very poor and declining on Shabbat. If there is a great need for them to assist or be with the patient, and the patient indicates that they need this person to be with them, they may be driven to the hospital by someone who is not Jewish if this can help improve the patient's condition.

7c. The phone may not be used for a non-critical situation, such as to inform family members of the gender of a child born on Shabbat or to inform family members of a death.

7d. However, if it will alleviate the patient's anxiety, one may have a staff member who is not Jewish call someone if they have a person who is not Jewish available to answer the phone, or an answering machine, to inform them of the patient's medical status.

---

118 Ibid., 32:41. In such a case one should put the receiver back on its rest in an abnormal manner (34:42).
119 When using a cell phone, one should also open the mouthpiece and dial the numbers in an abnormal fashion if doing so would not delay urgent patient care (Lev Avraham, 13:49).
120 Madrich L'chevra Hatzalah, 42.
121 This is because these lights do not contain a filament that glows.
122 Lev Avraham 13:84.
123 Shevet Halevi, 8:65.
124 Ibid.
126 Rabbi Dovid Weinberger, Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, Orthodox Union, 24 (On pg. 36 he writes in the name of Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach that if one’s family does not have someone who is not Jewish available
G. Use of the Call Button

1. A patient who is dangerously ill may use the electric call button to call for assistance even though a light will come on when it is activated. However, it should be pushed in an unusual manner, such as with their knuckles.¹²⁷

2. If a patient whose illness is not life-threatening is confined to their bed and needs to relieve themselves:
   a) They should try to find somebody who is not Jewish who can call for assistance or
   b) If this option is not available, one may ring the electric bell themselves, in an unusual manner, in order to preserve human dignity.¹²⁸

3. In all of these situations of great need, the button should be pressed in an unusual manner, such as using one’s elbow or the back of the hand, unless this could be detrimental to the patient’s condition or treatment.¹²⁹

4a. One who is not dangerously ill should avoid pressing this button, but should instead inform their nurse beforehand that they will not be able to do so on Shabbat and ask that the nurse periodically check in to see if the patient has any specific needs.

4b. However, one who is ill, even if not dangerously so [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], and needs their nurse does not have to wait until the nurse checks in on them but may push the call button in an unusual manner, (as described in paragraph 3 above).¹³⁰

H. Parking and turning off a Car¹³¹

1. Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah states, “A driver who has brought a dangerously ill patient to the hospital should leave their car parked at the spot where it has come to a halt at the end of the journey, unless it could be a potential source of danger in that position. They must not drive the car further than is essential for the welfare of the patient, merely in order to avoid the risk of being fined for parking in a forbidden area.”¹³²

¹²⁷ Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:23.
¹²⁸ Ibid.
¹²⁹ Ibid.
¹³⁰ Rabbi Gershon Bess, based on Mishnah Berurah 328:57.
¹³¹ Because this guide is intended to assist people who face challenges pertaining to Jewish Law in a hospital setting, all of the complicated rulings related to driving cars on Shabbat in an emergency situation are beyond the scope of this work (see Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:60-86 for that discussion). We will instead limit ourselves to the issues that take place at the hospital itself.
¹³² Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:57. One should thus not leave the car right in front of the hospital entrance, where it could obstruct the access of the other drivers bringing emergency cases for treatment. One should thus stop before actually reaching the hospital entrance, or drive sufficient distance beyond the entrance to avoid interfering with the traffic to the hospital.
2. “If the engine is still operating after one has come to a halt, one may ask someone who is not Jewish to turn it off (but it is better to just tell him that the engine is still on and let him draw his own conclusion as to what he ought to do). If there is no one who is not Jewish available, then, subject to the contents of the next paragraph, there is room for taking a lenient attitude and

1) Having the engine switched off by a boy under age thirteen or a girl under twelve, or
2) In the absence of a minor, turning the engine off oneself, preferably in an unusual manner.”

3. Although one should not switch off the engine if it will cause any lights to illuminate or turn off since this is not part of the effort to save the patient’s life, “An exception occurs, and one may have the engine turned off by a minor or even turn it off oneself (if no one who is not Jewish is available), when leaving the car with the engine running would create public danger, as where

1) There is reasonable fear that the continuous running of the engine will make it overheat, causing the radiator to explode and injure passersby, or
2) There is a risk of children playing with the car.”

4. The car’s headlights may not be turned off, as this is not necessary for the patient’s needs. The exception to this would be a case in which a vehicle will be needed again for a seriously ill patient and leaving the headlights on may result in difficulty restarting the car.

5. The ignition keys should be left in the car since they are Muktzeh (an object one is forbidden to carry on Shabbat). However, if they are also used for opening the car’s doors or if other keys, such as one’s house keys, are also on the key chain, one may carry all of the keys together. Furthermore, if there is a real possibility that the car would get stolen if the ignition key is left in it, it may be removed.

6. If there are people who are not Jewish available to park one’s car for them [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept], they should be asked to do so rather than turning the car off oneself. Ideally this should be done simply by hinting to the fact that it would be appreciated if the person who is not Jewish did this on one’s behalf, rather than directly asking them to do so.

7. If upon exiting the car a light will go on, the light should be turned off first

---

133 Ibid., 40:59.
134 Ibid., 40:60.
135 Ibid.
136 Ibid., 40:69.
137 Ibid., 20:80.
138 Ibid.
139 Ibid., 20:86 fn. 309.
140 Lev Avraham, 13:55.
141 B’shivilei Beit Harafuah, Dinei Shabbat, 9:1.
142 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah, 40 fn. 151.
so that it will not light up when the door is opened. If lights will still turn on, the door should be opened and closed in an abnormal manner, such as using the back of one’s hand, or two hands to open it, or closing it with their elbow or foot.\textsuperscript{143}

- There is a valet on duty at the Emergency room parking lot in the North Tower from M-F, 8 a.m. to 1 a.m., as well as at the Street Level of the South Tower from 6:30 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. M-F, and 10:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. on the weekends.
- When the valet is not on duty, especially in case of an emergency, the cashier in the parking lots may park one’s car, or Security may be contacted if the cashier is unavailable.

I. Discharge on Shabbat/Holidays

Driving home from the hospital on Shabbat/Use of a Taxi

1a. A doctor, ambulance driver, or any other person who has driven where needed for the sake of a dangerously ill patient is not allowed to drive a car back on Shabbat except in the following circumstances:

1) They are required to make another trip for a person whose life may be in danger, or

2) There is a reasonable likelihood that they will be required to make another such journey (e.g., the doctor is “on call” and may be contacted later on Shabbat to care for a different patient in some other location).\textsuperscript{144}

1b. A doctor may return home with a non-Jewish driver [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept], and may even call a taxi to take them to the hospital instead of driving oneself (assuming the delay does not endanger the patient) so that the taxi will be available to drive the doctor back home afterwards.\textsuperscript{145}

1c. Even when one may drive back, the driver may not:

1) Stop on the way or make a detour from the shortest route back to their base, except for reasons connected with the saving of human life, nor

2) When one reaches their destination, they may not travel farther than is essential to enable them to fulfill their duties in the event of another call.\textsuperscript{146}

2a. A patient who is discharged on Shabbat and has nowhere to go, or a visitor who must return home (such as parents who are needed to tend to their children), and for whom it is difficult to remain in the hospital over Shabbat

\textsuperscript{143} Madrich L’chevra Hatzalah, 118.

\textsuperscript{144} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:79-81. Lev Avraham 13:fn.188 points out that since doctors have cell phones today, there is often less of a pressing need for them to return home on Shabbat to be available near their telephones.

\textsuperscript{145} Ibid., 40:81. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah points out that a doctor may call a taxi to return home with a non-Jewish driver even if there is no pressing need, but the doctor prefers to be at home. See also Nishmat Avraham OH 329:9 (3) & 278:4 (46).

\textsuperscript{146} Ibid., 40:79.
should not return home with a Jewish driver, even if the driver him or herself is allowed to drive (such as a doctor or ambulance driver as mentioned above).\textsuperscript{147} Instead, one should ask someone who is not Jewish to call a non-Jewish car service to bring them home.\textsuperscript{148} If there is no one else to call the taxi, it is preferable to call it oneself rather than to drive a car on Shabbat, since making a phone call is one prohibition and driving a car on Shabbat involves constant Biblical transgressions of “kindling” every moment that the car is driving.\textsuperscript{149}

2b. If one has permission to travel in a car operated by someone who is not Jewish, it is ideal if they can arrange with the driver to pay the fare after Shabbat, even if this means that they will have to promise the driver a better tip, as it is preferable to paying on Shabbat. Another option is to request that someone who is not Jewish pay the driver for them. If this cannot be worked out, one can use a prepaid ticket, or if this is not possible, one may even take money with them and pay the fare on Shabbat, but should not accept change from the driver. One should ideally show the driver where the money is so that he can remove it himself and one will not be forced to handle money on Shabbat, but if the driver does not agree, then one can hand the driver the money directly. Nevertheless, this should ideally be done only after consultation with a rabbinic authority, as it may lead others to conclude that one is violating Shabbat without justification.\textsuperscript{150}

3. If one is leaving the hospital on Shabbat and has in their possession valuable \textit{Muktzeh} objects, or if an individual does not rely upon the Los Angeles Community \textit{Eruv}, if there is no place where they can securely leave their possessions in the hospital until after Shabbat, they should be taken with them in an irregular manner,\textsuperscript{151} such as placing the objects inside one’s shoes or between the clothes that they are wearing. One should not keep them in their hand or pocket unless they are needed for the safety of a patient.\textsuperscript{152}

- To receive a voucher for a complimentary taxi ride, one can talk to the Social Worker on their unit to make these arrangements, or contact the nursing office after hours.
- Cedars-Sinai is well within the Los Angeles Community \textit{Eruv}.

\textsuperscript{147} Madrich L’chevra Hatzalah, 114-115.
\textsuperscript{148} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah, 40:81.
\textsuperscript{149} Ibid., 40 fn. 176.
\textsuperscript{150} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 38:13, Lev Avraham 13:68.
\textsuperscript{151} Nishmat Avraham OH 252:7(5).
\textsuperscript{152} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchata 32:54.
J. Writing on Shabbat

1. Writing on Shabbat is a Torah prohibition which includes writing any meaningful symbol. Therefore, one who arrives at the hospital on Shabbat may not sign in upon admittance or check off boxes on a form. However, they may tell all of their necessary information to someone who is not Jewish [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept], even if it will result in that person writing the information down.

2. If a patient is asked to sign a consent for the performance of an urgent procedure or treatment, they should explain that they cannot sign it on Shabbat and instead give verbal consent before witnesses. If the hospital management is not satisfied with this, one may sign a document if:
   a) The patient's life is, or may be, in danger and
   b) The hospital management makes the performance of the operation conditional on the prior consent of the patient or their relatives. (The method of signing is described below in 3c & 3d.)

3a. Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah states: “A Jewish doctor may write anything which has to be written on Shabbat for a person whose life is in danger. This could include, by way of example,
   a) Urgent prescriptions for medicines,
   b) An urgent letter referring a patient to a hospital, and
   c) Important medical particulars which are liable to be forgotten, or confused with those of another patient, if left unrecorded.

3b. However, it is forbidden to write down something which does not directly affect the patient’s treatment (for instance, that he belongs to a medical insurance plan).

3c. Moreover, one must limit oneself to writing the absolute minimum without which one would be unable to do what is necessary to save the patient, and one must not add even one more letter than needed, or a period at the end of the sentence.

3d. One should try to write whatever is essential in a manner different from that which one would adopt another day of the week, for example by using one’s left hand. Of course, where speed is vital and writing in a different manner is liable to result in delay, one should write in one’s usual way.”

153 Mishnah Berurah 306:47.
154 Chasdei Avraham vol. 2, 15:3.
155 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:25.
156 Ibid., 32:48.
157 It should be noted that although using one’s weaker hand is considered “abnormal” enough with regards to writing, it is not always considered sufficiently abnormal to permit other prohibited actions. For example, carrying where there is no Eruv, turning on a switch, lifting a telephone handset, writing on a computer, or erasing would all have to be done in a more “abnormal manner” than using one’s weaker hand, such as using one’s elbow or back of the hand. See Mishnah Berurah 340:22 (end); B'Shulei Beit Harefuah, 7.
158 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:49.
4. Because one should always attempt to do the fewest possible transgressions, if one must write and they have a choice, it is preferable to write on a computer which has already been turned on than to write on paper by hand.\(^\text{159}\)

5. A patient who is on a respirator and has no method of communication other than writing things that cannot be hinted may write whatever is needed. If possible however, this patient should still attempt to write with their non-writing hand, and use as few words and letters as possible to get the message across.\(^\text{160}\)

6a. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes: “When a patient is discharged from the hospital on Shabbat, it is forbidden to write out, or to request a Jew to write out, a certificate of discharge on Shabbat.

6b. One may ask someone who is not Jewish to write out the certificate, if:

- 1) The patient is still ill, even though not dangerously so.
- 2) The patient needs further treatment, as specified in the certificate, and
- 3) It will not be possible to obtain the certificate after Shabbat, or waiting will cause a delay in the treatment.”\(^\text{161}\)

6c. If one is in a situation where their refusal to leave their room would cause pain to another person who needs the space, it is permitted to ask someone who is not Jewish to sign the forms for them, even if the patient is now fully healthy.\(^\text{162}\)

7. A patient who chooses to discharge themselves from the hospital against their physician’s recommendation is not permitted to sign a form, such as a release of liability, nor may they ask someone who is not Jewish to sign it for them. Rather, one should gather two witnesses (such as nurses) who can testify that the patient understands the decision that they are making, and this may be written down after Shabbat ends.\(^\text{163}\)

---

\(^{159}\) Shulchan Shlomo Hilchot Shabbat 340:4 (11); Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:48.

\(^{160}\) Nishmat Avraham OH 328:Intro 6(5).

\(^{161}\) Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:44 (40:54 in Hebrew edition).

\(^{162}\) Lev Avraham 13:118.

\(^{163}\) Ibid., 13:120.
The admissions staff at Cedars-Sinai is trained to respect the special Sabbath and other needs of traditionally observant patients. One who must check in or have a procedure on Shabbat, should not have to fill out or sign any forms until Shabbat is over, as stated in the following Policies and Procedures document regarding Consent of Admissions (COA) which is available to all staff members via the Intranet, or by accessing the option of refusal to sign for religious reasons available through CS-Link.

The Cedars-Sinai Admissions Policies & Procedures Manual states:

V. PATIENT UNABLE TO SIGN

B. If the patient is unable to sign due to a religious observation or practice, the Admissions employee will indicate on the Conditions of Admission, Unable to Sign and write Religious Observation.

1) The Admissions department employee will document “Patient Unable to Sign” along with the specific reason and sign, date and time the Conditions of Admission form in the appropriate place.

Similarly, upon discharge patients always have the right to refuse to sign, for whatever reason (particularly if the nurse notes “inability of patient to sign for religious reasons”) and that fact will be noted by the nurse or whoever is filling out the form.

Medicare patients are required to sign the Important Notice From Medicare delineating their rights, which is given to the patient within 48 hours of his/her discharge. However, the patient may decline to sign this form as well.

K. Shabbat Candles

Every Friday before sundown, traditionally observant Jews light candles to usher in the Sabbath, thereby fulfilling an obligation designed to provide an atmosphere of tranquility and increase the honor and joy of the day. Lighting candles for holidays is discussed in the section on Festivals.

LIGHTING AN ACTUAL FLAME INSIDE THE HOSPITAL IS VERY DANGEROUS AND FORBIDDEN; THEREFORE “CANDLES” IN THIS SECTION REFER TO ELECTRIC LIGHTS, AS WILL BE DISCUSSED BELOW.

1a. One who is not married should light Shabbat and festival candles even when they are in the hospital. One who is married may have their husband or wife light candles at home and say the blessing, which releases them from the obligation to light candles themselves.164

1b. Nonetheless, it is customary for a traditionally observant married Jewish woman to light her own candles and to recite the blessing, if she wishes, even if there is someone to light candles in her home.165

---

164 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 45:6.
165 Ibid., 45:6.
1c. One who prefers to have their spouse fulfill their obligation for them by lighting candles at home, should still have candles lit in honor of Shabbat in their room, but should do so without reciting the blessing.\footnote{B’shvilei Beit Harefuah, Shabbat 3:9.}

2. One who is able to get out of bed should light the candles near the table at which they will eat. If not, someone else should light them on the patient’s behalf, or the patient should light them near their bedside, where they will eat, and the candles should ideally not be removed.\footnote{Ibid., 36:16; B’shvilei Beit Harefuah, Shabbat 3:8.}

3a. One is not permitted to light a fire in a hospital. Therefore, one’s only option for lighting Shabbat and festival candles is to use electric lights. The \emph{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah} writes, “There are authorities who hold that the \emph{Mitzvah} can be satisfactorily performed by turning on electric light bulbs. A person who does this should recite the appropriate blessing in the usual way, provided they indeed switch on the lights in honor of Shabbat.”\footnote{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 43:4. To make it clear that one is turning the lights on in honor of Shabbat they should turn off the other lights in the room before turning on the Shabbat candles and then turn the lights that they will need over Shabbat back on in honor of Shabbat, and one must make sure not to turn on their candles before “Plag Haminchah” (1¼ halachic hours before sunset). See Shulchan Aruch OH 263:4.} However, a blessing should not be recited on electric Shabbat candles that do not provide any illumination to the room.

3b. Some say that it is best to simply turn on the regular lights in one’s room in honor of Shabbat and to recite the blessing on them instead of small candles or a flashlight.\footnote{B’shvilei Beit Harefuah, Shabbat 3:6.}

3c. If one is lighting electric candles, it is ideal to use battery-operated candles, such as a flashlight, in which there is sufficient energy to insure that the lights will remain lit at least until the time one begins their nighttime Shabbat meal.\footnote{Lev Avraham 14:9; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 43 fn. 100.}

4. A blessing should not be made on lighting candles which will not be able to be enjoyed by oneself or anyone else on Shabbat, as this would be a blessing made unnecessarily.\footnote{Mishnah Berurah 263:30.} Therefore, one who will be taken from their room into a procedure before Shabbat begins and is not likely to regain consciousness until it is impossible to benefit from the lit candles on Shabbat, should not light the candles with a blessing.\footnote{Nishmat Avraham OH 263:4. The Tzitz Eliezer 15:32(6) however, does permit lighting candles with a blessing in such circumstances.}

5. Although one may make use of the illumination provided by Shabbat lights for any purpose, one should not do anything in the glow of their lights which shows disrespect for the \emph{Mitzvah} of Shabbat lights.\footnote{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 43:41.} For example, a bedpan should not be used in the presence of Shabbat candles unless the patient is covered with a sheet.\footnote{Lev Avraham 14:3.}
6. Although a woman who forgets to light Shabbat candles would ordinarily begin lighting one more candle on every subsequent Shabbat than had been her custom to light until then, if her failure to light candles was the result of illness (either her own illness or that of a family member whom she was tending to), she is not required to add a candle thereafter.\textsuperscript{175}

L. Kiddush & Havdalah

The Torah commands us to verbally sanctify the Sabbath, “Remember the Sabbath day to make it holy” (Exodus 20:8). This means that one must single out this day and elevate it above the rest of the week with words of sanctity and praise.

To facilitate observance of this commandment, we recite the text of “Kiddush” (Sanctification) over a beverage (detailed below) prior to the evening and morning Sabbath meals.

1a. Once Shabbat has begun, both men and women\textsuperscript{176} may not eat or drink anything, even water, until they recite or hear Kiddush.\textsuperscript{177} However, one who is under doctor’s orders to take medicine before their meals may take it prior to Kiddush and may also drink a little water (but no other drink) to help them swallow, if necessary.\textsuperscript{178}

1b. One who is being fed through a tube, such as an IV, an NG tube, or a PEG, does not need to make or hear Kiddush prior to being fed.\textsuperscript{179} However, if one is able to hear someone else make Kiddush, or if they can recite just the “Vayechulu” paragraph, it is a good practice.\textsuperscript{180}

2. Kiddush should be recited using a nice, respectable cup in order to beautify the Mitzvah. One should therefore only use a disposable cup if they have no other option.\textsuperscript{181} If one doesn’t even have a disposable cup they may simply make Kiddush on the wine in the bottle (unless one has already drunk from that bottle).\textsuperscript{182}

3a. One should ideally recite Kiddush on wine or grape juice.\textsuperscript{183} However, if one is unable to obtain wine or grape juice, or is unable to drink them, for the evening Kiddush they should not use another beverage, but should make Kiddush over two whole loaves of bread (or bread rolls).\textsuperscript{184} If these are unavailable, then Kiddush may also be recited over a single slice of bread.\textsuperscript{185} If even this is not available, one may recite Kiddush over cake or cookies made from wheat, barley,

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{enumerate}
\item Shulchan Aruch OH 263:1 Rema; Mishnah Berurah 263:7; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 43:5.
\item Shulchan Aruch OH 271:2.
\item Ibid., 271:4.
\item Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 52:3. This is because one is not intending to enjoy the water.
\item Minchat Yitzchak 8:30; Lev Avraham 14:31 points out that they do not need to make blessings before and after being fed in this manner either.
\item Lev Avraham, 14:31.
\item Igrot Moshe, OH 3:39 (However, the Tzitz Eliezer 12:23 writes that a disposable cup is perfectly permissible); Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 47:11; Shulchan Shlomo, Hilchot Shabbat 271:18.
\item Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 47:11 & fn. 52.
\item Shulchan Aruch OH 272:2; Minchat Shlomo 1:4.
\item Ibid., 272:9.
\item Mishnah Berurah 274:2.
\end{enumerate}
\end{footnotesize}
rye, oats or spelt. If none of the above is available, one may recite Kiddush over an important drink, detailed in paragraph 3c below.

* The order of priorities for Friday night would thus ideally be wine or grape juice; the next best would be bread or bread products; and finally, an important drink other than wine.

3b. When making Kiddush over bread, the procedure is as follows:

- One should first wash their hands and say the blessing of “Al Netilat Yadayim.”
- Then they recite Kiddush in the normal manner from the beginning, covering and holding the bread.
- When one concludes the “Vayechulu” paragraph, they uncover the bread and simply say the full blessing of “Hamotzi Lechem Min Haaretz” instead of “Borei P’ri Hagafen.”
- One then finishes reciting the rest of Kiddush with the bread covered again and then eats the bread at the point where they would normally drink the wine.

3c. On Shabbat morning, if one is unable to use wine or grape juice, there is greater leniency regarding other accepted beverages. Therefore, instead of reciting Kiddush over bread, one may recite Kiddush on a drink of consequence that is not normally consumed only to quench thirst, but would be served in honor of the meal and guests, such as natural fruit juice or beer. If this is not available, one may even recite Kiddush Shabbat morning over a cup of milk, coffee or sweetened tea. One should not recite Kiddush over water, so if nothing else is available, Kiddush may be recited over bread Shabbat morning as well.

* The order of priorities for Shabbat morning is thus ideally wine or grape juice; the next best would be an important drink other than wine; and finally bread or bread products.

4. One who was unable to recite Kiddush on Friday night, but is able to do so Shabbat morning, should recite the Friday evening Kiddush on Shabbat morning but omit the “Vayechulu” passage.

---

186 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 53:7. In such a case one should ideally eat enough of the cake or cookies to form a meal (i.e. the same as the amount of bread they would normally eat at a meal) and then wash their hands and recite the same “Hamotzi” and “Birkat Hamazon” blessings over them as they would over bread. If they do not have enough to do this, then they would simply recite the appropriate blessing for that food item, such as “Mezonot” (Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 53:18; Lev Avraham 14:24).

187 Lev Avraham 14:23. However, the Lev Avraham points out that the Sephardi authorities rule that on Friday night one may not use anything other than wine or bread for Kiddush.

188 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 53 fn. 24.

189 Ibid., 53:15.

190 Shulchan Aruch OH 289:2

191 Igrot Moshe OH2:75.

192 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 53:9. See also paragraph 8 below.

193 Ibid., 53:11.

194 Ibid., 53:12.

195 Ibid., 53 fn. 34.

196 Shulchan Aruch OH 271:8; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:57. This is true even if they did fulfill the Mitzvah of Kiddush Friday night through having it in mind during the Amidah prayer (Lev Avraham 14:30).
5a. A patient who is unable to consume wine, grape juice, or bread, is exempt from reciting Kiddush. In such a case, one should ideally hear someone else recite Kiddush.\(^{197}\) If this is not possible, then when one says the Amidah prayer they should have the intention during the benediction “Mikadesh HaShabbat” to include the Mitzvah of Kiddush, and would then be able to eat without making the usual Kiddush.\(^{198}\) One who is simply unable to fulfill the Mitzvah of saying or hearing Kiddush should still fulfill the Mitzvah of eating their Shabbat meal, even without Kiddush.\(^{199}\)

5b. If suitable beverages or bread become available later during the course of Shabbat, they should then be used to recite Kiddush.\(^{200}\)

5c. Even if one knows that a suitable beverage or bread will be arriving later, they should not wait for them if they are weak and find it difficult to wait.\(^{201}\)

6. One who is feeling weak and must eat on Shabbat before saying the morning prayers should still recite Kiddush before eating. He should preferably first say at least the “Birchot HaTorah” blessings and the first paragraph of the Shema before reciting Kiddush.\(^{202}\)

Havdalah

As part of the commandment to honor the Sabbath, the Torah requires one to make a verbal expression of its sanctity and holiness separate from the rest of the week at its conclusion with a service called “Havdalah” or “Distinction.”

7a. Once Shabbat is over, one may not begin to do “work” until they have either said the “Havdalah” benediction during the Amidah prayer or recited the phrase “Baruch Hamavdil Bein Kodesh L’chol.”\(^{203}\)

7b. One may not partake of food or drink, other than water, until they have recited (or heard) the full Havdalah over wine (or other accepted beverage mentioned in the next paragraph).\(^{204}\) However, someone who is weak may eat if they need food and are not yet able to recite or hear Havdalah until much later.\(^{205}\)

8a. One may recite Havdalah with a beverage other than wine, provided that it is an important enough drink that in one's locality it is not drunk merely to quench thirst, but serves a social function and could grace the dinner table and be served to guests (See next paragraph for examples).\(^{206}\)

8b. Although it is ideal to recite Havdalah on wine, this is not always available in a hospital or safe for a patient to consume. Some other alcoholic beverages

---

\(^{197}\) Shulchan Aruch OH, 272:9 Rema.

\(^{198}\) Mishnah Berurah 289:10; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:57.

\(^{199}\) Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 53:14.

\(^{200}\) Ibid., 52:25.

\(^{201}\) Ibid., 52:23.

\(^{202}\) Ibid., 40:55.

\(^{203}\) Shulchan Aruch OH 299:10.

\(^{204}\) Ibid., 299:1.

\(^{205}\) Mishnah Berurah 296:21.

\(^{206}\) Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 60:3.
acceptable for Havdalah include beer, brandy or another strong drink.\textsuperscript{207} One may recite Havdalah on juice, ideally grape juice, but may also do so on orange or grapefruit juice, as well as cider.\textsuperscript{208} Sweetened tea, coffee, or milk should only be used if one has nothing else available.\textsuperscript{209} Neither water nor soft drinks should be used for Havdalah.\textsuperscript{210}

9a. Included in the Havdalah ceremony is the blessing made over a flame, “Borei Meorei Ha-esh.” Since one is not permitted to kindle an actual flame in the hospital, many authorities rule that one may use light from a clear electric bulb for this blessing.\textsuperscript{211} However, one may not use an opaque or frosted light bulb (because the blessing should not be recited over a “flame” that is covered and not visible, even if one can see the light which radiates from it),\textsuperscript{212} nor a fluorescent light (because there is nothing burning).\textsuperscript{213}

9b. If someone is blind, it is preferable for them to hear Havdalah recited by someone else. If no one else is available, the blessing “Borei Meorei Ha-esh” should not be recited.\textsuperscript{214}

10a. While people often set aside a special container to make the blessing over fragrant spices, one may use any spice commonly found in the kitchen.\textsuperscript{215} One should not use liquid perfume instead of spices.\textsuperscript{216}

10b. If one is unable to obtain fragrant spices for the “B’samim” blessing, they may omit it and still recite the rest of Havdalah. However, if they obtain spices later during the course of that Saturday night, they should make the blessing over smelling them.\textsuperscript{217}

10c. If one is unable to smell, such as due to a cold, they should not recite this blessing. However, if one is with another person, they may ask that person to smell the spices and say the blessing, and then respond “Amen” to their blessing.\textsuperscript{218}

11. If one is simply unable to get a clear light bulb or fragrant spices in the hospital, one may fulfill their obligation to recite Havdalah without either or both of these blessings.\textsuperscript{219}

12. Although not all agree that women are obligated to make Havdalah, if there is no one available to make Havdalah for her, a woman may make Havdalah herself and drink the wine (or other suitable beverage).\textsuperscript{220} A woman may also

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{207} Ibid., 60:4.
\item \textsuperscript{208} Ibid., 60:5; Lev Avraham 14:37.
\item \textsuperscript{209} Ibid., 60:6; Lev Avraham 14:37.
\item \textsuperscript{210} Ibid., 60:7.
\item \textsuperscript{211} Ibid., 61:32.
\item \textsuperscript{212} Ibid., 61:31.
\item \textsuperscript{213} Ibid., 61:32.
\item \textsuperscript{214} Shulchan Aruch OH 298:13; Lev Avraham 14:48.
\item \textsuperscript{215} Mishnah Berurah, 297:10.
\item \textsuperscript{216} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 61:12.
\item \textsuperscript{217} Ibid., 61:3.
\item \textsuperscript{218} Ibid., 61:5.
\item \textsuperscript{219} Shulchan Aruch OH 297:1 & 298:1.
\item \textsuperscript{220} Shulchan Aruch OH 296:8 & Mishnah Berurah 35; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 58:16. However, since a woman is not obligated to make the blessing on the light, it may be considered an unwarranted interruption, and \end{itemize}
make Havdalah for a man if he is unable and there is no one else available to do so for him.\footnote{221}{B’shvieli Beit Harefuah, 23:1. In such a case Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach suggested that a man should first recite “Baruch Hamavdil Bein Kodesh L’chol” (Shulchan Shlomo, Erchei Refua vol. 1, 164).}

13a. If one was unable to make Havdalah Saturday night, they should do so as soon as possible, up until sunset Tuesday night, at which point it may no longer be recited.\footnote{222}{Shulchan Aruch OH 299:6.}

13b. If one is making Havdalah after Saturday night, they should not recite the blessings over the flame or fragrant spices.\footnote{223}{Ibid.}

14. It is preferable to wait and hear Havdalah in person rather than to hear it over the telephone,\footnote{224}{Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, 22 (in the name of Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach).} but when no other solution exists, then one may fulfill their obligation by hearing Havdalah over the telephone and responding, “Amen” to the blessings.\footnote{225}{Igrot Moshe, OH4:91 (4).}

- At Cedars-Sinai, “It is the policy of the Food and Nutrition Services Department that under normal circumstances, doctor’s order or not, no hard liquor is to be provided for patients by the Food and Nutrition Services Department. Beer and wine are not considered hard liquor and can be served by doctor’s order.”
- Kosher wine may be ordered through the kitchen as long as one’s doctor has signed off for the diet.
- Wine, grape juice or bread rolls should be ordered at the time one orders their meal, because these items are not stocked on each floor. If Shabbat has not yet begun, and the Spiritual Care office is open, kosher grape juice and bread rolls are also available in that office.
- A patient or their visitors may bring their own wine, but it may only be served to the patient with the consent of a doctor.

M. Food Preparation on Shabbat

One of the prohibited activities on Shabbat is cooking. This prohibition relates to both cooking raw food until it becomes edible and the act of warming foods, and particularly liquids, in many circumstances. At the same time, there is an obligation to enjoy Shabbat and eat enjoyable food on it (in accordance with the doctor’s dietary instructions).

1. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes, “One may cook on Shabbat for a dangerously ill person who needs hot food to strengthen and refresh them if there is no suitable hot food available or the hot food which is available is not she should thus either skip this blessing or say it after she has drunk from the Havdalah cup (Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 61:24).”
fresh enough for the patient. Similarly, if there is no hot water available, one may boil hot water on Shabbat for a dangerously ill patient who needs a hot drink.”

2. One may not cook, or take part in any of the cooking process, for a patient who is not dangerously ill. However, one may ask someone who is not Jewish to cook or heat food or liquid for such a patient [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept].

3a. A visitor, or any person who is not dangerously ill, may not eat any of the food cooked for a patient. The only exception to this is if one needs to taste food for a dangerously ill patient to ensure that it is good for them.

3b. If the food was not cooked on Shabbat, but was only heated up by someone who is not Jewish, the visitor may eat it on Shabbat once it has cooled down. If the visitor has no other way of obtaining warm food on Shabbat, they may eat the remainder of pre-cooked food that was heated up on Shabbat by someone who is not Jewish for the sake of a patient, even while it is still hot. On a Yom Tov (festival), however, food may be heated even for a visitor.

4a. Although it is ideal to open all cartons, cans, packaging etc. before Shabbat begins in order to avoid creating a new container on Shabbat, the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah rules that, “One may tear open seals of the following kinds, (if one is very careful about the conditions contained in the next paragraph): paper seal covering the top of a bottle, paper wrapping around chocolate, the internal seal under the lid of a box or a jar of instant coffee (whether made of paper or other material); and the plastic or metal-foil top of a yogurt or sour-milk container.

The following conditions must be observed:

a) The seal or wrapping should be torn open in such a way that it is spoiled, and it goes without saying that one must not intentionally tear it in a manner which leaves even part of it fit for any use (as where one tears carefully along the edge of prize tokens printed on a wrapping). This condition is equally applicable whether one is tearing the wrapping or seal itself, or separated two pieces of paper or cardboard which are stuck together.

b) One must not tear through lettering or pictures.”

---

226 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:72. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah Hebrew edition 32 fn. 195, notes that if the food is not needed to strengthen and refresh the dangerously ill patient, only rabbinic prohibitions may be transgressed in the preparation of the food, not Torah prohibitions.

228 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:78; Shulchan Aruch, OH 318:2.

229 Shulchan Aruch, OH 318:2, Mishnah Berurah 11. This food, however, may be eaten by anyone immediately after Shabbat is over unless the food was cooked (not just warmed up) on Shabbat by someone who is not Jewish for a patient who is not dangerously ill, in which case there is a difference of opinion regarding the permissibility of someone else eating it after Shabbat (See Nishmat Avraham OH 326:62, pg. 461 for detailed discussion).

230 Rabbi Zvi Goldberg, “The Visitor’s Halachic Guide to Hospitals” Star –K Kashrus Kurrents, Vol. 29 no. 1 (Spring 2009), 2. This is because the prohibition is getting benefit from any forbidden labor on Shabbat, and once the food cools down there is no benefit from its being heated up.

231 Teshuvot V’Hanhagot 3:363.

232 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 9:11-12.
4b. Similarly, “Packets which are usually emptied of their contents and thrown away immediately upon being opened, such as packets of sugar, may be opened on Shabbat, even along a line specifically marked for that purpose, if indeed they are thrown away once opened. One should be careful not to cut or tear through lettering or pictures.”

4c. Regarding opening a container for items such as tissues, cookies or cereal on Shabbat, the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes, “Cartons of cut, folded toilet paper should not be opened by cutting along the special marking or tearing along a perforation, as is usually done in order to make a convenient slot to facilitate the removal of the paper, sheet by sheet. The carton should be ripped open and all of the paper removed.”

4d. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah also writes that, “Some authorities permit the opening of cans, bags, and paper packets which are not normally re-used, even without spoiling them, as long as: 1. One does not in fact intend to re-use them after removing their contents AND 2. One does not specifically intend to make a particularly neat opening for more convenient use.”

- All kosher food at Cedars-Sinai is heated up on Shabbat in a manner permitted under the guidance and direction of the Rabbinical Council of California.
- When meal orders are taken on Shabbat, the staff has been trained to circle a Sabbath observant patient’s choices on the menu for them, so that he or she will not have to write on Shabbat.

N. Treatment on Shabbat

1. One may carry throughout a hospital building even without preparing an “Eruf Chatzeirot.”

2a. A patient who is dangerously ill [see ch. II. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] who is connected to an electric monitoring device, which keeps track of their blood pressure, heart rate, etc. may move in their bed on Shabbat as they please, even if this causes the numbers on the monitor to change.

2b. A patient who is dangerously ill may even remove themselves from the monitor on Shabbat (if there is no one who is not Jewish available to do it for them) if they would like to get out of their bed for any reason (with the doctor’s and nurse’s permission). When the patient returns to their bed, they may reconnect themselves to the monitor (if a non-Jew is unavailable to do it [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept]) but should ideally do so in a manner different from what they would do during the week.

---

234 Ibid., 9:8.
237 Lev Avraham 13:123.
238 Ibid.
3a. When one has an option of when to schedule a surgery, procedure, or childbirth it should ideally be done in the beginning of the week so that there is as little chance as possible of having to violate Shabbat for the patient’s post-operative treatment.\textsuperscript{239}

3b. However, one may choose to have a surgery at the end of the week in order to be treated by their preferred surgeon, to reduce the amount of time they have to spend waiting in the hospital (where they can more likely become ill), or if they are in pain and would like to have the surgery as soon as possible to relieve their suffering.\textsuperscript{240} Similarly, if waiting to schedule a delivery of a baby will result in any danger to the mother or the fetus, it should be done as soon as the doctors recommend.\textsuperscript{241}

3c. One should not have any surgery on Shabbat unless the doctor states that there is a pressing need and a delay could endanger the patient, in which case the surgery may take place on Shabbat.\textsuperscript{242}

3d. If one must choose between having a procedure on Shabbat or \textit{Yom Tov} (festival), it should be done on the \textit{Yom Tov}. If it must take place on \textit{Yom Tov}, one should choose the second day of the \textit{Yom Tov} over the first.\textsuperscript{243}

3e. The above notwithstanding, if a person has no choice and must undergo an operation at the end of the week, one may still violate Shabbat to do whatever is necessary for the patient, now that they are in the category of a patient whose life is in danger [see \textit{ch. I. Sec. B}, for an explanation of this concept].\textsuperscript{244}

4a. A dangerously ill patient [see \textit{ch. I. Sec. B}, for an explanation of this concept] may allow someone who is not Jewish to perform various necessary acts, such as an operation, take x-ray photographs, have a plaster cast filled, etc. on Shabbat.\textsuperscript{245} As long as one is passive and not doing anything significant in the process, then he or she may allow someone who is not Jewish to take an x-ray or fill a cast even if they are not dangerously ill.\textsuperscript{246}

4b. One whose condition is not life-threatening however, should avoid treatment on Shabbat that can just as effectively be done on a different day of the week, such as certain preliminary x-rays, blood tests, or elective surgeries, as long as one's physician feels that it is safe to delay it. If there is a procedure that is necessary for the patient’s health and welfare, one should allow a care-provider who is not Jewish to do it (unless a person is dangerously ill, in which case anyone, Jew or non-Jew, may carry out the procedure for the patient).\textsuperscript{247}

\textsuperscript{239} \textit{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah} 32:35; 36:4.
\textsuperscript{240} \textit{Lev Avraham} 13:137.
\textsuperscript{241} \textit{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah} 36:4.
\textsuperscript{242} \textit{Lev Avraham} 13:213.
\textsuperscript{243} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{244} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{245} \textit{Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah} 38:3.
\textsuperscript{246} Rabbi Gershon Bess, based on \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 328:11.
\textsuperscript{247} \textit{Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient}, 22-23.
5. Although strenuous exercise is forbidden on Shabbat, one who needs to may engage in physical therapy (including the use of weights or springs) on Shabbat.248

6. Hand sanitizers, such as Purell, are similar to liquid soap and may thus be used on Shabbat and festivals, even if they contain fragrances.249

Medicine

7. There is a rabbinic prohibition against taking medicine on Shabbat.250 This prohibition includes oral medication,251 such as pills or liquids, and topical medication, such as lotions, ointments, sprays, suppositories, injections, or drops.252 The regulations governing this prohibition are very intricate, but a brief overview of the subject is as follows:

8. One who is dangerously ill may take medication on Shabbat for any ailment that they are suffering from.253

9. One who is in the category of having a non-life-threatening serious illness [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], may take all necessary oral medications on Shabbat.254

10. Further exceptions to this prohibition may be made in the following cases:
   - If one is suffering from a painful ailment, the medicine may be mixed into food or drink before Shabbat.255
   - Medicine that must be taken daily, including Shabbat (and was already initiated before Shabbat), and will cause damage to the patient, or a relapse of the illness, if they do not take the medication on Shabbat.256
   - To preserve human dignity, e.g., to relieve a nasal discharge that is disturbing to other people.257
   - Non-oral medications or therapies may be administered if done in a manner differing from the way they would be done normally, [see ch. II. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept].258

---

248 Nishmat Avraham OH 328:42 (93).
249 Rabbi Dovid Cohen (in the name of Rav Gedalia Dov Schwartz), Sappirim, Issue 12 (Published by the CRC - Chicago Rabbinical Council, April 2008) 8, based on Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 14:18. Bar soap, on the other hand, should not be used on Shabbat.
250 Shulchan Aruch OH 328:1.
251 Ibid., 328:37.
253 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:52,56.
254 Shulchan Aruch OH 328:37 Rema; Mishnah Berurah 328:121; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 33:4.
255 Shulchan Shlomo, Shabbat 328:36.
256 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 34:17 & fn. 77; Lev Avraham 13:190.
257 Ibid., 34 fn. 52.
258 Rabbi Gershon Bess based on Mishnah Berurah 328:102 & 130.
Taking Temperature on Shabbat

11. Use of a thermometer on Shabbat to take one’s temperature is permitted for one who is ill, even if it is only a minor ailment. According to Jewish Law, it is ideal to use the old-fashioned, mercury-type thermometer on Shabbat.

12. A digital electronic thermometer is much more problematic according to Jewish Law because it works by turning on and off electrical circuits and causes numbers to be written on an electronic LCD display. Electric thermometers should thus only be used for a dangerously ill patient [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], even if the caregiver who is operating it is not Jewish.

13. Plastic strip and disposable chemical dot thermometers register temperature by changing colors depending on the design of each brand. If one can already make out the numbers or letters before the thermometer is used, it is permitted even to a patient with only a minor ailment, even if the color changes, since the letters were already there and using it added nothing, and it is only temporary writing. However, if the numbers or letters are not visible before it is used, it is forbidden because it is considered writing. Nevertheless, if one is in a hospital and their temperature must be taken and this is the only type of thermometer available, it may be used.

14. These guidelines and restrictions do not apply to one with a life-threatening illness or to a young infant for whom a fever can be life-threatening.

Mental Anguish

15. The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes, “It may happen that a dangerously ill person [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] requests something which is unconnected with their medical treatment, but which would set their mind at rest or soothe them.

a) One may not violate Shabbat by the infringement of a Torah prohibition in order to comply with such a request (except in the circumstances outlined in the next paragraph), but:

b) One may infringe a rabbinical prohibition, although here too, when possible, one should not perform the activity in the normal manner, but in a different way from that which one would adopt on an ordinary day of the week.”

---

259 Igrot Moshe OH:128.
261 Ibid., 14:34.
263 Shulchan Shlomo, Hilchot Shabbat vol. 3, 312 (based on Mishnah Berurah 328:102).
264 Rabbi Yisroel Pinchas Bodner, Halachos of Refuah on Shabbos, 353.
265 See page 22 for some examples of rabbinic and Torah prohibitions.
266 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32:25.
16. “There are dangerously ill patients whose prospects of overcoming their illness and recovering their health depend on their mental state. In such cases, one should be lenient and perform even acts prohibited by the Torah, if their omission might possibly result in a disturbance of the patient’s mental equilibrium. One should also beware that the patient does not fall into a state of depression out of fear that they are not being properly taken care of.”

17. “One may violate Shabbat in cases of this kind, even when one has not been requested to do so by the patient.”

O. Pregnancy & Childbirth on Shabbat

Labor & Delivery

1. A woman during childbirth is considered to be in the category of a seriously ill patient [see ch. I, Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], and the laws of Shabbat can be set aside for her when necessary. However, unlike other patients in this category, since childbirth is a natural, physiological phenomenon, whenever possible the Shabbat prohibitions may only be set aside in an indirect or unusual manner or by someone who is not Jewish [see ch. II, Sec. B & C, for explanations of these concepts]. No such variation from the normal manner should be done if it would result in a detrimental delay in doing what is necessary.

2a. One may begin to suspend the laws of Shabbat where necessary from the moment she feels that the time has come for her to give birth. This moment is considered to have arrived once she begins feeling regular labor pains, even if it is doubtful whether or not birth is immediately imminent.

2b. However, activities which can be delayed should not be performed in violation of Shabbat until the moment when:
   a) She is dilated to an extent which indicates that birth is imminent, or
   b) The water breaks, or
   c) The bleeding which can precede birth begins, or
   d) The patient is no longer able to walk between contractions.

Therefore, before one of these situations has arisen, one may only violate Shabbat to do something essential which is connected to the birth (such as transporting the patient to the hospital), but nothing unrelated to the birth itself (such as boiling water for the patient, activating an air conditioner, turning on a light, etc.) which may be done once one of these conditions has begun.
2c. These rules apply both to a woman who is giving birth and to one who has had a miscarriage or abortion.\footnote{Ibid., 36:5 (assuming the miscarriage took place after more than forty days since the commencement of her pregnancy).}

3. If there is a “false alarm” and it turns out that a woman has arrived at a hospital to give birth too early and she is thus discharged or refused admission on Shabbat, the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah writes that she is not allowed to return home in a vehicle driven by a Jew. She may return in a vehicle driven by a non-Jew if:

1) There is nowhere comfortable in the vicinity of the hospital for her to stay until after Shabbat, \textbf{and}
2) Her home is within the “city limits.”\footnote{Ibid., 36:10. “City limits” refers to the “\textit{Techum}” (prohibition against traveling on Shabbat more than approximately 6/10th of a mile beyond the outer limits of the city one is in).}

4. If one is asked to sign something, such as a waiver or consent form for a specific treatment on Shabbat, see \textbf{ch. II. Sec. G}, for guidelines. It is advisable to find out when one pre-registers if there is a chance that they may be asked to sign anything during the course of the delivery, and to sign it ahead of time so that they won’t have to do so on Shabbat.\footnote{Ibid., 36:9.}

5. Before delivery, a woman may take a hot shower or bath and adjust the water temperature if she believes that the hot water will help the delivery\footnote{Nachman Schachter, \textit{Guide to Halachos}, edited and approved by Rabbi Moshe Heinemann, (Feldheim publishers), 41.} (though if possible this should be done by someone who is not Jewish).

6. After delivery, a woman may not take a hot shower on Shabbat unless directed to do so for medical reasons. However, on a \textit{Yom Tov} (festival),

\begin{itemize}
  \item The Cedars-Sinai department of Labor and Delivery accepts verbal consent for admission and all medical interventions, so one should not have to write on Shabbat or Jewish holidays.
  \item Cedars-Sinai strongly encourages Labor and Delivery patients to complete their hospital registration well in advance of the due date (ideally before 20 weeks of pregnancy). By submitting a Pre-Admission form all relevant information will be entered into the hospital’s computer system prior to admission and a patient will then be sure to get the timeliest care possible. The patient will then need to bring only her insurance card and any necessary insurance forms upon arrival.
  \item Pre-Admission forms are available online, from one’s doctor or from the Cedars-Sinai admitting office.
\end{itemize}
she may take a hot shower if she chooses, though ideally she should have someone who is not Jewish turn on the hot water if possible).

7a. Once a woman has given birth, she is regarded by Jewish Law as a seriously ill patient whose life is in danger [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] for a week after the birth.

7b. This week is divided into two categories. For the first seventy-two hours from the time of the birth, one may violate Shabbat to do anything for the sake of the mother’s health or to make her feel better, that someone with even minimal knowledge of medical matters sees as being necessary. This is the case even if there is no doctor or midwife available, and even if the mother herself doesn’t think that she needs what is being done for her.

7c. Nevertheless, the manner in which one performs the forbidden act should be varied from the way one would do it on an ordinary weekday as much as possible, or if there is someone who is not Jewish available, it would be better if they did it [see ch. II. Sec. B & C, for explanations of these concepts].

8. For the next ninety-six hours (four days), Jewish Law continues to regard the mother as a patient whose life is in danger, but in this latter period one should not violate Shabbat for anything which the mother herself asserts that she does not need, even if non-professional laypeople think that the act in question is required for the patient (as long as the doctor or midwife does not say that the violation is necessary for her). However, if there is no contrary medical opinion, then one may even rely upon a non-expert opinion to violate Shabbat for a mother in this category who sincerely requests.

9. From day eight through the thirtieth day after the birth, the mother is no longer considered to be in danger, though she is still regarded by Jewish Law as a person who is ill [see ch. I. Sec. A, for an explanation of this concept]. During this time, someone who is Jewish may transgress only a rabbinic Shabbat prohibition for the sake of the mother and it must be done in a manner different from the way it would be done on a weekday, or one may ask someone who is not Jewish to do anything necessary for the mother’s health.

10. In all of these situations it is permitted to directly instruct somebody who is not Jewish to perform an action on behalf of an ill person, even one that is prohibited by the Torah, without the need to hint.

---

278 Ibid.
280 Ibid.
281 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:15. These time frames are counted from the exact time of the birth, such that one may transition from one category to another even within the same Shabbat.
282 Ibid., 36:14.
283 Ibid.
284 Ibid., 36:15.
285 Shulchan Aruch OH 328:17, Mishnah Beruah 47; Mishnah Berurah, 330:16; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah
11. A woman who has a caesarean delivery is considered dangerously ill for as long as the doctors tell her she should be treated with extra caution (not limited to the above standardized time periods), after which she moves into the category of a patient who is not dangerously ill.

12. If any potentially dangerous complications arise in the mother’s condition anytime after the birth, she should once again be treated as a patient whose life is in danger.

P. Nursing Mother on Shabbat

1. If one needs creams or oils to make it easier for the baby to nurse, free-flowing oil may be applied, but thick cream may only be dabbed on and not rubbed in.

2. If the mother needs to clean herself before the baby nurses, she should not use wet absorbent cotton wool or gauze on Shabbat, even if it is held with forceps. Instead, she should either use nylon (non-absorbent) swabs or if these are not available, she may first pour the liquid, such as water, alcohol or iodine, onto the part of the body concerned, and only afterwards wipe it dry with absorbent cotton wool, gauze or tissue.

3a. Breastfeeding a child is completely permitted on Shabbat and Jewish holidays. However, expressing (pumping) milk into a receptacle for later use is prohibited on these days.

---

36:15.
286 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 36:16.
287 Ibid., 36:15
288 Guide to Halachos, 42.
289 Ribiat, 39 Melochos, 921.
290 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 36:17.
291 Ibid., 32:59.
292 Ibid., 36:18.
Expressing milk is prohibited on Shabbat because, as mentioned above, one of the prohibited Shabbat labors is threshing, “Dosh,” or the removal of grain kernels from their chaff. A derivative of this labor is called “Mefarek,” which refers to extracting a food or liquid from its attachment or covering.

3b. Exceptions to this prohibition are made when the purpose of expressing the milk is either to relieve the mother’s pain, or if the baby is unable to feed and there is a concern that by not expressing milk for an entire Shabbat, the mother will no longer be able to breast feed the baby who is in need of milk.293

3c. In these exceptions, milk should not be expressed into a vessel, unless it is in a way that ensures it cannot be used.294

3d. If a mother is expressing milk in order to encourage a baby to begin nursing, she must express the milk directly into the baby’s mouth.295

3e. If the baby does not normally drink formula, and its primary diet is its mother’s milk, then for the sake of the baby it would also be permitted to express milk on Shabbat into a receptacle.296 However, milk should not be expressed on Shabbat if it is to be used after Shabbat.297

4. Nursing caps may be used by mothers whose supply of milk is inadequate for their infants.298

5. If one uses an electric pump,299 it should either be connected to a timer (“Shabbat clock”)300 or turned on by someone who is not Jewish.301 If neither of these options is possible, then one may turn on the machine on their own in an abnormal manner, such as with the back of their hand or the back of a finger.302

293 Ibid., 36:21.
294 Ibid., 36:20; see also Mishna Berurah 330:32; Shulchan Aruch OH 328:34, Beur Halachah s.v. “v’tanik.” Examples include expressing the milk directly into the sink or a cloth, or a contaminant like dish soap is put in the receptacle before expressing to render the milk unfit for use. If none of these exceptions exist, then one may not express milk, even if it will go to waste.
295 Ibid., 36:20.
296 Ibid., 36:21. This is only true if the baby is unable to nurse directly from its mother or is in the hospital and the mother has to bring fresh milk every day.
297 Lev Avraham 13:292-293. If more milk is needed than can be expressed after Shabbat, formula should be given to the baby in addition to the mother’s milk, unless the baby’s health depends upon receiving its mothers milk.
298 The 39 Melochos, 357. Nursing caps are specially designed cap-like devices placed over the nipples to collect droplets of milk that leak between each nursing.
299 The Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah suggests that an electric pump may even be preferable to a hand pump which causes a new Shabbat violation with each pump (Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 36: fn. 63), though Rabbi Ribiat advises using a hand pump instead of an electric device (The 39 Melochos, 356).
300 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 36:21.
301 Some also rule that if possible the pump should be placed on the mother’s breast before the machine is activated (Guide to Halachos, 42).
302 Lev Avraham 13:291 (The Lev Avraham also quotes R. Ovadia Yosef, who suggests that one may activate the machine with the help of another person, so that it becomes a case of two people doing one act, and is thus only rabbinically prohibited on Shabbat).
Q. Care for Infants & Children

1. Any Shabbat prohibition may be set aside for the sake of a newborn (even in the case of a baby who will not be able to live for very long).\(^\text{303}\)

2a. A child up to the age of nine or ten (depending on the stage of their development) generally requires special treatment and may thus always be classified in the category of a non-life-threatening serious illness [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept]. This applies both to preparation of food and to tending to the child’s other needs which affect his or her health.\(^\text{304}\)

2b. Therefore, one may ask someone who is not Jewish [see ch. II. Sec. C, for an explanation of this concept] to do whatever is necessary for the well-being of a small child, even if it involves setting aside Torah prohibitions for their sake (such as cooking or turning lights on and off).\(^\text{305}\)

2c. A child may be given any necessary medication, such as nose, eye or ear drops, syrups or tablets. The tablets may even be crushed and mixed with a drink if necessary.\(^\text{306}\)

2d. However, each case must be judged on its own. If it is possible to satisfy the child’s needs with something one already has and without violating Shabbat, one would certainly not be permitted to transgress even a rabbinic prohibition or ask someone who is not Jewish to do the act for them.\(^\text{307}\) On the other hand, if the child is in fact seriously ill, one should follow the rules above in ch. I. Sec. B regarding doing whatever is necessary for the sake of a dangerously ill patient.

3. One may use baby wipes on Shabbat provided that they do not have to tear or separate attached towelettes. Furthermore, one must only make use of the moisture that is already on the surface of the cloth, and thus be careful not to apply pressure to avoid squeezing the contents out.\(^\text{308}\)

4. Despite the prohibition against tearing, one may use disposable diapers on Shabbat and pull open their adhesive tabs, because the tab-shield is only a protective covering and is merely temporarily bonded.\(^\text{309}\) Similarly, one may unfold a new diaper even if its lining is stuck or fused at the ends, because this fusing effect occurs unintentionally during production and packaging.\(^\text{310}\)

\(^{303}\) Lev Avraham 13:294.

\(^{304}\) Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 37:2.

\(^{305}\) Ibid., 38:24.

\(^{306}\) Ibid., 37:9.

\(^{307}\) Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 37:2.

\(^{308}\) Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, 37; The 39 Melochos, Rabbi Ribiat, 352 (though Rabbi Ribiat advises using tissues and water instead of baby wipes when possible).

\(^{309}\) The 39 Melochos, 844. Rabbi Ribiat notes that if one wants to be strict, they can simply open and close the tabs before Shabbat to cause the bonding of the tabs to be classified as temporary.

\(^{310}\) Ibid. 845-846.
5a. Lotion or baby oil should not be put on an absorbent material such as cloth or a cotton ball (because squeezing the liquid out of the cotton would constitute a violation of Shabbat). Rather, one may apply it by hand or by pouring it directly onto the baby’s skin and only then gently wiping it with a cloth or towel (see explanation of this concept above in the section “Nursing Mother on Shabbat”). 311

5b. A thick cream (such as Balmex, Desitin, or zinc oil) should not be smoothed onto a baby on Shabbat. If one wishes to smooth something of a thick consistency onto a baby, it should first be thinned out by adding a large quantity of oil 312 or it should simply be dabbed on the desired area instead of being smeared (see explanation of this concept above in the section “Nursing Mother on Shabbat”). 313

5c. One may apply a cream onto an infant if the cream will be completely rubbed into the skin so that it no longer creates a “smoothed surface.” 314

311 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 37:7.
312 Ibid., 37:6.
313 Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, 31.
Jewish holidays, such as Passover, Shavuot, Sukkot, Rosh Hashanah, and Yom Kippur, have restrictions and observances similar to those for Shabbat. For example, using electrical appliances, going to work, handling money, and writing—are all forbidden on festivals as well. The major differences between the two are that on festivals, cooking, lighting a fire from a pre-existing flame, and carrying in the public domain are generally permitted. Some of the specific issues relevant to a hospital patient will be discussed below.

1. Some have the custom to avoid giving blood or having blood tests on the day before a festival, particularly Shavuot. However, a patient with any sort of medical need may do so.

2a. Although on festivals one is technically permitted to light candles even after nightfall, this is only true if the flame is transferred from an already existing flame. Since only electric candles can be used in the hospital, these may not be turned on after nightfall.

2b. For the same reason, there is no way to light electric candles on the second night of the festival. The only option would be for a patient's family member to light on their behalf at home. A person in the hospital for the festival would thus be considered unable to light (“Ones”) and therefore exempt.

3a. As on Shabbat, if one was unable to make Kiddush in the evening, they should recite the evening Kiddush the next day.

3b. So too, one who was unable to make Kiddush in the evening should simply say the “Shehecheyanu” blessing as soon as they are able, even if it is not while they are making Kiddush. If the entire day passes and one was unable to say it, one may even recite the blessing during “Chol Hamoed.”

4. Unlike Shabbat, one may turn on a hot water faucet on festivals in order to wash one's hands and face (or other limited parts of the body).

5a. Activating or deactivating an electric device on a festival is a rabbinic prohibition according to many authorities. One may, therefore, explicitly ask (i.e. without hinting) someone who is not Jewish to activate, deactivate or adjust the setting of any electrical device if the need derives from the necessity to perform a Mitzvah, enjoy the festival, significant monetary loss, slight illness, or another great necessity.

---

315 Shulchan Aruch, OH 495:1.
316 Ibid., 468:10 & Mishnah Berurah 38.
318 Ibid., 291:5.
5b. Similarly, a Jew may increase the setting on an infinitely adjustable dial (rheostat) on a festival, provided that the device is already activated and one is merely increasing an already existing flow of energy. For example, one may adjust the setting on a thermostat to cause the heater or air conditioning to run longer if it (including the condenser motor) is already running.322

6. The first and second days (as well as seventh and eighth) are both observed equally on each festival.323 However, there are times when an action prohibited by rabbinic ordinance (and not the Torah itself) on the first day of a festival is permitted on the second day.324 For example, if one is discharged from the hospital on a festival, it is preferable to leave (i.e., take a taxi driven by someone who is not Jewish) on the second (or eighth) day of the festival, rather than the first (or seventh).

7. One who was unable to recite or hear “Havdalah” the evening on which the festival ended, should do so as soon as possible, but may do so the entire next day up until sunset of the day following the festival, but not later.325

A. Chol Hamoed

The holidays of Passover and Sukkot consist of two days at the beginning and two days at the end with complete festival restrictions and observances. The intermediate days between the beginning and end are known as “Chol Hamoed” and have far fewer restrictions.

1. Although on Chol Hamoed activities requiring professional precision are prohibited, one may perform any action necessary to treat even a minor ailment,326 unless the matter could just as well be scheduled for after Chol Hamoed.327

2. Those who do not shave on Chol Hamoed, do not do so even if they were unable to shave before the festival due to an illness.328 However, a patient may shave if this is part of his treatment.329

---

322 Guide to Halachos, 49.
323 Shulchan Aruch, OH 496:1.
324 Ibid., 496:2 & Mishnah Berurah 7; Lev Avraham 15:1. Since the second days of the festivals are rabbinic, all prohibitions on these days are thus rabbinic, and therefore such a prohibition may be overridden in order to relieve even a minor ailment (Shulchan Aruch, OH 496:2 & Mishnah Berurah 6-8).
325 Mishnah Berurah 273:16.
326 Shulchan Aruch OH 532:2.
327 Igrot Moshe OH3:78.
328 Shulchan Aruch, OH 531:2-3.
329 Mishnah Berurah 531:21; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 66 fn. 124.
B. Rosh Hashanah

Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, is also commonly referred to as the Day of Judgment, as it marks the creation of humanity and is a time of reflection. It is a two-day holiday, with Sabbath-like restrictions, and one of its central observances is the sounding of the Shofar, a ram’s horn.

1. Although rabbinic (not Torah) prohibitions may often be overridden for medical necessity on the second day of holidays (as discussed above), on Rosh Hashanah there is no difference between the first and second day.330

2. Although it is customary to have a new fruit or article of clothing in front of oneself when making the “Shehecheyanu” blessing on the second night of Rosh Hashanah, one may still recite the blessing even if one is unable to obtain such items.331

3. A man who lights holiday candles should recite the “Shehecheyanu” blessing when making Kiddush, but a woman should recite the blessing when she lights candles, and she should not repeat it if she makes Kiddush for herself.332

Shofar

4a. One who is unable to go to synagogue to hear the Shofar must try to ensure that someone can come to them so that they can hear at least thirty Shofar blasts.333

4b. A man who blows Shofar on behalf of other men should say the blessings of “Lishmoa Kol Shofar” and “Shehecheyanu” even if he has already fulfilled the Mitzvah of Shofar himself.334 If he is blowing Shofar on behalf of a woman: If she is Sephardi, the blessings should not be said;335 if she is Ashkenazi, the blessings should be said by the woman.336

5a. One may hear the Shofar even if they have not yet said their morning prayers.337

5b. Although one should not eat before hearing the Shofar, one who is ill and would find it difficult to go without food until they will be able to hear the Shofar, may make Kiddush and eat before hearing Shofar (although they should say the morning prayers, or at least the blessings over the Torah and the first paragraph of Shema, before making Kiddush).338

330 Shulchan Aruch OH 496:2 & Mishnah Berurah 5-6.
331 Ibid., 600:2.
332 Lev Avraham 17:16.
333 Ibid., 17:10.
334 Shulchan Aruch OH 585:2 Rema; Shulchan Aruch OH 589:6 Rema.
335 Ibid., 589:6.
336 Ibid., Rema.
337 Ibid.
338 Ibid., 17:13; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40:45.
6. Because one who is praying alone should ideally wait until three Halakhic hours (¼ of the time between sunrise and sunset) of the day have passed before they say the Mussaf prayers of Rosh Hashanah, one who is praying alone should ideally also not hear the Shofar before this time, if possible.

- Arranging for someone to blow Shofar in a patient’s room can be facilitated by contacting the Spiritual Care office at 310 423 5550

C. Yom Kippur

Yom Kippur—the Day of Atonement, beginning eight days after Rosh Hashanah—is the holiest day of the Jewish calendar. Jews refrain from all eating and drinking for this entire day (commencing before sundown and concluding after nightfall the following day). Other pleasures, such as bathing or applying non-medical ointments, are also restricted.

Prayer

1. One who is unable to recite all of the Yom Kippur prayers should try to say at least the short confession (“Viduy Katzar”), “Chatati, Aviti, Pashati” and then ask God to cleanse and forgive them, and conclude with their own praise of God.

2. One who is in an unclean environment may nevertheless recite the “Viduy” (confession) of Yom Kippur if they have no other choice, but without mentioning God’s name.

Eating

3a. Just as it is permitted, and even obligatory, to violate the laws of Shabbat in order to save life, so too it is a Mitzvah for a person whose life may be in danger to eat and drink (or transgress any other prohibition of the day) on Yom Kippur. Even a person who is not currently in mortal danger, but may become dangerously ill [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] if they do not eat or drink, must eat or drink on Yom Kippur.

3b. One who decides to be “strict” and fast despite the directive of their doctor and rabbi not to do so, is not considered pious but like a shedder of blood, about whom we apply the verse, “your blood, of your souls, I will demand an account.”

---

339 Ibid., 17:14; Nishmat Avraham OH 591:1.
341 Lev Avraham 18:40; Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach adds that in such a case one should also not have in mind to be fulfilling the Mitzvah of “Viduy.”
342 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:1.
343 Mishnah Berurah 618:5.
4a. A doctor’s orders, irrespective of his or her religion, must be followed when they say that a patient must eat, even if the patient thinks that they can go without food.\textsuperscript{344} If a doctor is not available, anyone who has any knowledge of medicine is trusted when they say that the patient must eat or drink to save their lives.\textsuperscript{345}

4b. If one is instructed to eat or drink, and they have time to consult with a rabbi, they must do so, particularly to find out if they should eat normal amounts or in measurements (see next section for explanation of this concept). However, if the case is urgent and life-threatening, and the physician has ordered the patient to eat without any delay, the doctor’s orders must be followed.\textsuperscript{346}

4c. The patient’s own opinion that he or she is in need of food overrides that of a physician who disagrees,\textsuperscript{347} unless the physician is of the opinion that food would actually do the patient harm.\textsuperscript{348}

5. One should stay in bed in order to be able to fast on \textit{Yom Kippur} rather than consume food or drink (even if only by measurements) so that they will be able to attend synagogue.\textsuperscript{349}

6. A patient who is fed via an NG tube or PEG may continue to be fed in this manner on \textit{Yom Kippur} (though one should not initiate feeding of this sort just in order to avoid the ruling of the doctor or rabbi regarding eating or drinking on \textit{Yom Kippur}).\textsuperscript{350}

7. Even one who is permitted to eat on \textit{Yom Kippur} as a result of their poor health should eat only enough to provide the necessary nutrition and not consume any treats that they do not need to sustain them.\textsuperscript{351}

8. One who only needs to drink but can get by without eating, for example to prevent a kidney stone, may drink (even beverages besides water, such as milk with sugar or fruit juice), but may not eat. If they must drink normal amounts they may do so; otherwise they should drink only in measurements.\textsuperscript{352}

9. A diabetic patient receiving insulin, either by continuous infusion pump or by multiple injections, should fast on \textit{Yom Kippur} if their doctor agrees that this will not put them in danger, by adjusting doses of insulin (by measuring the blood glucose levels).\textsuperscript{353}

10. In any situation in which a patient must eat on \textit{Yom Kippur}, the rabbi’s and the physician’s opinion must be sought regarding whether it will be sufficient

\textsuperscript{344} \textit{Shulchan Aruch OH} 618:1.
\textsuperscript{345} \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 618:1.
\textsuperscript{346} \textit{Lev Avraham} 18:5.
\textsuperscript{347} \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 618:4.
\textsuperscript{348} \textit{Aruch Hashulchan} 618:5-6.
\textsuperscript{349} \textit{Lev Avraham} 18:7.
\textsuperscript{350} Ibid., 18:8-9.
\textsuperscript{351} Ibid., 18:20.
\textsuperscript{352} Ibid., 18:13.
\textsuperscript{353} Ibid., 18:13.
to feed the patient in measurements (discussed below) or if the patient needs to eat regular amounts. Furthermore, one must also determine if it is sufficient to provide only beverages, or if the patient must eat food as well. There may also be times when one is permitted to eat once on Yom Kippur because of a great need, but they may still not eat any more after that.354

Blessings

11. One who must eat on Yom Kippur does not recite Kiddush or use two loaves of bread, even if it is also Shabbat.355

12. Patients who must eat on Yom Kippur are obligated to wash their hands if they eat bread in the same manner as they would were it not Yom Kippur.356

13. One who is going to eat an amount of bread equivalent to the volume of an egg (approximately 1.9-2.95 fl ounces) within nine minutes should also make the blessing over washing their hands. However, if one will not be eating this amount of bread, they should wash their hands without making the blessing.357

14. One who must eat on Yom Kippur makes the appropriate blessing before eating food, but when eating in “measurements” (as discussed below) they need only make the blessing once, and not repeat it every time they swallow food, unless they assumed that they would not need to eat any more.358

15. One who eats an amount of food equivalent to the size of an olive (approximately 1.1-1.5 ounces) within nine minutes must make the blessing after eating that food. If one ate bread, “Yaaleh V’Yaavoh” is inserted into the “Birkat Hamazon,” although if one forgot, they need not repeat the “Birkat Hamazon.”359

Taking Medication on Yom Kippur

16. One who has a non-life-threatening serious illness [see ch. 1. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] or may become ill without medication, may swallow pills if their doctor requires them to, but only if they can do so without swallowing any water along with it. It may be worthwhile to practice swallowing medication without water before Yom Kippur. If one is unable to do this and must take the medications, one may use a minimal amount of water to assist them in swallowing, but the flavor of the water should be made defective by adding something bitter.360

356 Lev Avraham 18:25, Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach explains that one would wash their entire hand despite the prohibition against washing on Yom Kippur because this is not washing for pleasure.
357 Shulchan Aruch OH 158:2.
358 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:23.
360 Ibid., 18:11-12, Dr. Abraham quotes Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach as allowing drops of soap to be added to the water to render it poor tasting, so that it is also considered drinking in an unusual manner, which is permitted for a non-dangerously ill patient. Some advise putting bitter-tasting Echinacea in water to use as the bitter drink (one
17. However, one who is dangerously ill [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] or may become so if they don’t take their medication, may use undiluted water to help them swallow their medication if they are unable to do so without water.\textsuperscript{361}

18. One who is healthy at the moment, but without medication will become ill, even not dangerously so (such as experience migraines or vomiting), may swallow a pill without water to prevent this condition. However, it is better to take the medication via a suppository, if possible.\textsuperscript{362}

i. Eating in “Measurements”

Food

1. Though we have pointed out that one whose life may be endangered by fasting on \textit{Yom Kippur} is obligated to eat, not all patients who are obligated to eat on \textit{Yom Kippur} have the same exemption. Some patients’ illnesses warrant only minimal eating or drinking as described below. This method is referred to as eating in “measurements” and it refers to eating less than a prescribed amount within a given period of time:

2a. The prohibition against eating on \textit{Yom Kippur} is unique since “eating” isn’t prohibited, but rather the Torah obligates “\textit{Inuy}” or self-affliction (Leviticus 23:29). Eating an amount of food equivalent to a large date\textsuperscript{363} is necessary to be considered culpable, because the rabbis ruled that any less than this does not put a person at ease and they are still “afflicted.”\textsuperscript{364} This amount is approximately 30 ml (or cc),\textsuperscript{365} which is equivalent to just under one liquid ounce. One should measure before \textit{Yom Kippur} how much food can be squeezed into a one ounce whisky shot glass and eat just a bit under that amount.\textsuperscript{366}

2b. It must be pointed out that these measurements apply to unique circumstances when one has specific permission to eat on \textit{Yom Kippur} and only reference avoiding the punishment of “\textit{Karet}” (spiritual excision) for eating on \textit{Yom Kippur}. If it is not a life-threatening situation, partaking of even any amount of food or drink on \textit{Yom Kippur}, regardless of how small, is prohibited by the Torah.\textsuperscript{367} should consult with a health care professional to determine if it is advisable to consume Echinacea on a fast day); others advise using something that is not fit for food, like Maalox, to get the medication down.

\textsuperscript{361} Ibid., in the name of \textit{Igrot Moshe OH} 3:91.
\textsuperscript{362} Ibid., 18:12.
\textsuperscript{363} \textit{Shulchan Aruch OH} 612:1.
\textsuperscript{364} \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 612:1.
\textsuperscript{365} \textit{Nishmat Avraham OH} 612:1.
\textsuperscript{366} Rabbi Gershon Bess.
\textsuperscript{367} \textit{Shulchan Aruch OH} 612:5 & \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 612:11.
3. One who is permitted to eat this minimal amount should preferably wait nine minutes (or at least 6-7 minutes)\textsuperscript{368} from the time they finish the previous consumption until they begin eating or drinking again.\textsuperscript{369} However, if the doctor determines that it is necessary for the patient to consume the food in a shorter span of time, one may do so.\textsuperscript{370}

4. It is important to point out that these measurements govern the amount of food one eats, not the quality. One who must eat in this manner on \textit{Yom Kippur} is thus advised to get the most out of their minimal consumption and choose foods with a lot of calories and nutrition to help sustain them throughout the day.\textsuperscript{371} One should also discuss with their doctor what the ideal food or drink would be for them to consume in these small amounts.\textsuperscript{372}

5. Since eating in measurements is preferable to eating larger amounts, one whose health condition and rabbinic ruling allow them to eat in measurements should begin doing so in the morning, to prevent their condition from deteriorating, thus forcing them to eat a larger amount of food.\textsuperscript{373}

\textbf{Beverages}

6a. The amount of liquid consumed on \textit{Yom Kippur} to be considered culpable is more than a cheek-full, because the rabbis ruled that any less than this does not put a person at ease and they are still “afflicted.”\textsuperscript{374} For an adult this is generally about 40 ml of water,\textsuperscript{375} which is about 1.3 ounces. The amounts of all liquids consumed, if one drinks different types, are added up and measured together for this purpose.\textsuperscript{376}

6b. One can ascertain his or her personal “cheek-full” by filling their mouth completely with water, expelling the water into a measuring cup and dividing that amount in half. This number is the amount held by one cheek, and the amount permitted is slightly less than this amount.\textsuperscript{377}

6c. It is advisable, but not obligatory, that all measurements be made before \textit{Yom Kippur}.\textsuperscript{378}

7. One who is permitted to drink in measurements may drink beverages other than water, such as milk with sugar or fruit juice.\textsuperscript{379}

\textsuperscript{368} Aruch Hashulchan OH 618:14.
\textsuperscript{369} Lev Avraham 18:17; Shulchan Aruch OH 612:7.
\textsuperscript{370} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:19; Lev Avraham 18:17.
\textsuperscript{371} Lev Avraham 18:18.
\textsuperscript{372} Ibid., 18:21.
\textsuperscript{373} Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39 fn. 69 (1979 edition).
\textsuperscript{374} Shulchan Aruch OH 612:9.
\textsuperscript{375} Lev Avraham 18:21.
\textsuperscript{376} Mishnah Berurah 612:23.
\textsuperscript{378} Mishnah Berurah 618:21.
\textsuperscript{379} Lev Avraham 18:18 in the name of Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach.
8. One should wait the same amount of time between drinks as is required for eating (paragraph 3 above), but if this is still insufficient for the patient, they should at least wait for a few moments (15-30 seconds)\(^ {380}\) between these minimal drinks.\(^ {381}\)

9. Amounts of food and beverage are not combined, so that one may eat the minimal amount and then immediately drink the minimal amount.\(^ {382}\) However, if food, such as bread, has been soaked in a liquid, the measurements are combined so that one may still not eat more than 30 ml of this combined product.\(^ {383}\)

ii. Pregnancy and Childbirth on Yom Kippur

1a. A pregnant woman who is well must fast on Yom Kippur during all stages of pregnancy.\(^ {384}\) She should rest and avoid any strenuous activity or even going to synagogue. If she feels abnormal weakness she should drink in measurements, and if she needs, eat in measurements as well.\(^ {385}\)

1b. If she begins feeling regular contractions before she is full term, she should drink as much as necessary in order to stop the contractions. If she is full term and gets contractions, she should consult her obstetrician regarding drinking so as not to be dehydrated when giving birth.\(^ {386}\)

1c. Since a woman who has become pregnant following in vitro fertilization is more likely to miscarry during the first weeks after becoming pregnant, during these early stages of pregnancy she should drink in measurements.\(^ {387}\)

2a. From the time a woman is in active labor until seventy-two hours after she gives birth, she should not fast at all.\(^ {388}\)

2b. During this period, even if she and her doctor think that she is able to fast, she should eat, but in measurements.\(^ {389}\)

3a. After seventy-two hours following childbirth, i.e. from day four through day seven, the following rules apply:

- If the woman wants to eat and the physician doesn’t disagree, or if the physician considers it necessary and she doesn’t think that she needs to, then in both of these cases she should eat normal amounts.

- If she wants to eat but the physician does not consider it necessary, or if she is not sure and the physician does not say that she needs to eat, then she should eat only in measurements.

---

380 Rabbi Gershon Bess
381 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:22.
382 Shulchan Aruch OH 612:2.
384 Lev Avraham 18:30; Shulchan Aruch OH 618:1.
385 Lev Avraham 18:30.
386 Ibid; Rabbi Gershon Bess.
387 Ibid.
389 Ibid., 617:4 & Mishnah Berurah 10; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:12.
• If she says that she does not need to eat and the physician agrees, she should fast.390

3b. These time categories are based on the number of hours since giving birth. Therefore a woman's category may change during Yom Kippur itself.391

4. After the seven days following childbirth, the woman is classified as one who has a non-life-threatening serious illness [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] until day thirty. A woman in this category must fast392 unless her condition deteriorates and she or her doctor feels that it may become life-threatening, in which case she must eat.393

5. The above rules apply equally in the case of a woman who has a live birth, a stillbirth, an abortion, or miscarriage more than forty days after becoming pregnant.394

6. A nursing woman is obligated to fast on Yom Kippur.395 If the baby drinks formula, she should feed the baby with formula rather than break her fast. However, she may drink (but not eat) in measurements if she would not otherwise have sufficient milk for her baby and the baby is entirely dependent on her milk for its sustenance, thus putting the baby's life in danger.396 She should try to avoid this situation by drinking large quantities of liquid before Yom Kippur begins.397

D. Sukkot

Sukkot, the Festival of “Tabernacles,” is a joyful holiday celebrated five days after Yom Kippur. It begins before sunset and extends until nightfall seven days later, when the next holiday (Shemini Atzeret/Simchat Torah) begins. The first two and last two days of this holiday have Sabbath-like festival restrictions. Throughout the entire holiday, one eats and dwells in a Sukkah (temporary outdoor structure) and recites blessings over the Four Species (citron, palm branch, myrtle and willow branches).

1a. One who is ill is not obligated to dwell in a Sukkah.398 This is because one is supposed to dwell in a Sukkah the way they would dwell in their home. Since hospitalized patients are not dwelling in their homes, they are exempt.399 This exemption not only applies to one whose life is in danger,

391 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:15.
392 Shulchan Aruch OH 617:4.
393 Mishnah Berurah 617:12.
394 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:16.
395 Shulchan Aruch OH 617:1.
396 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 39:18.
397 Ibid.
398 Shulchan Aruch OH 640:3.
but also to a person suffering from a mild ailment [see ch. I, Sec. A, for an explanation of this concept], who need not eat in the Sukkah\textsuperscript{400} if eating elsewhere is more comfortable.\textsuperscript{401}

1b. One who is assisting a patient is also exempt from dwelling in a Sukkah during the time that the patient requires him or her.\textsuperscript{402} If the patient's life is in danger and they need constant supervision, one who is attending to them would remain exempt at all times.\textsuperscript{403}

2. One should not eat before fulfilling the Mitzvah of shaking the Lulav.\textsuperscript{404} However, one who is ill and would find it difficult to go without food until they will be able to do this Mitzvah, may eat before they pray, but should at least recite the blessings of the Torah and the first paragraph of the Shema (and recite Kiddush if it is Shabbat or Yom Tov) before eating.\textsuperscript{405}

3a. One who does not have any hands should take hold of the Lulav and Etrog with their arm if possible.\textsuperscript{406} If one has only one hand, they should take hold of the Lulav (along with the Haddassim and Aravot) with that hand and hold the Etrog with the arm opposite it. If one is unable to take hold of the Etrog with their arm, then they should take the Lulav and Etrog individually in succession, first the Lulav by itself and then the Etrog by itself, in their good hand (regardless if that is the right or left hand).\textsuperscript{407}

3b. One whose arm is paralyzed, but is able to take hold of the Lulav and Etrog with some assistance from another person, may fulfill the Mitzvah in this manner.\textsuperscript{408}

4. Although one should stand while making the blessings “Al Netilat Lulav” and “Shehecheyanu,”\textsuperscript{409} if one is unable to stand, they may say it while sitting.\textsuperscript{410}

5. If possible, one should remove any Band-Aids or bandages from their hands before performing the Mitzvah of taking the Lulav and Etrog, but if they are unable to, or if it is inadvisable to do so, they may nevertheless perform the Mitzvah and say the blessings with them on.\textsuperscript{411} Similarly, one whose hand is encased so that they can only hold the Lulav or Etrog with their fingers, may nevertheless perform the Mitzvah and say the blessings.\textsuperscript{412}

\textsuperscript{400} Shulchan Aruch OH 640:3.
\textsuperscript{401} Mishnah Berurah 640:9.
\textsuperscript{402} Shulchan Aruch OH 640:3.
\textsuperscript{403} Mishnah Berurah 640:11.
\textsuperscript{404} Ibid., 692:15.
\textsuperscript{405} Shulchan Aruch OH 651:4 Rema.
\textsuperscript{406} Mishnah Berurah 651:23.
\textsuperscript{407} Lev Avraham 19:13.
\textsuperscript{408} Shulchan Aruch OH 651:4 Rema.
\textsuperscript{409} Mishnah Berurah 651:27.
\textsuperscript{410} Lev Avraham 19:13.
\textsuperscript{411} Ibid.

III. Festivals
On Sukkot, a kosher Sukkah is always available for patients, their families and staff on the Plaza Level of the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center main building, near the south tower.

During Sukkot, a Lulav and Etrog are available in the Sukkah and upon request from the Spiritual Care office.

E. Chanukah

Chanukah, the Jewish festival of rededication, also known as the “festival of lights,” is an eight-day minor holiday in the winter, on which all types of “work” that are prohibited on Shabbat and most other holidays are permitted. Chanukah is generally observed by lighting candles in the evening and reciting additional prayers of thanksgiving.

Electric Lights

1. According to most opinions, one does not fulfill the Mitzvah of lighting Chanukah candles with electric lights.413 However, a hospitalized patient who has no alternative should perform the Mitzvah of lighting the Menorah with electric lights, but should not recite the blessings.414

Location of Lights

2a. When lighting an electric Menorah in a hospital room, it is best to place it in a spot where one does not normally put lights so that it is clear that it is there for the sake of the Mitzvah.415

2b. It is best to light one’s Menorah near the window in order to publicize the miracle. This is so even for one who normally lights their Menorah by their front door, since this is generally not feasible in a hospital.416

2b. There is a principle that the kindling is the performance of the Mitzvah, and not the placing of the light.417 Therefore, a patient who is confined to their

---

413 Although this is the general practice, Lev Avraham 23:2 quotes a ruling of Rav Eliyashiv and Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach that if one is in a difficult situation and has no other choice, they may make a blessing on electric lights, such as flashlights, as long as they are battery powered and have enough energy left in the batteries to last the entire time that the candles must stay lit. A blessing should not be said on a Menorah that is plugged into an electrical outlet.

414 Lev Avraham 23:1. The rules of lighting a Chanukah Menorah differ from those of lighting Shabbat candles because on Shabbat the goal is to bring illumination to the room in honor of Shabbat, whereas on Chanukah we attempt to reenact the miracle of the Menorah that occurred with burning wicks and oil.

415 Ibid.

417 Shulchan Aruch OH 675:1. bed and cannot get up to kindle the Chanukah lights by the window should not light them next to their bed and have someone move them. Rather, another person should kindle them in the correct place on behalf of the patient or they should be kindled by the bedside and left there.418

Spouse on Behalf of Patient

3. The Mishnah Berurah writes that “When one’s wife kindles Chanukah lights in his home he fulfills his obligation with her kindling, even if he is in a place that is far away from his home.”419 Therefore, the spouse of a hospitalized patient should light the Chanukah lights at home and bear in mind to include their husband or wife in the Mitzvah.420

F. Purim

Purim is a one-day annual minor holiday commemorating the miracle recounted in the Biblical book of Esther. On this holiday, traditionally observant Jews are allowed to do the types of “work” that are prohibited on Shabbat and most other holidays, but there are a number of special Purim obligations that Jewish patients will want to fulfill.

1. A patient who is unable to attend synagogue to hear “Parshat Zachor” should read it from a Torah scroll without a blessing or, if this is not possible, read it from a printed Chumash.421

2a. One who is healthy may not eat a meal before hearing the reading of the Megillah on Purim eve, even if the fast has been difficult.422 However, a light snack may be eaten if necessary.423

2b. If waiting until someone comes to read the Megillah in one’s room on Purim night will be too difficult, one may arrange to hear the Megillah during the afternoon before Purim if possible, as long as it is after “Plag Haminchah” (an hour and a quarter before sunset).424 They may then break their fast upon Halakhic nightfall (“Tzeit Hakochavim”).

2c. If one needs to eat before hearing the Megillah, and a light snack will not be sufficient, the patient may eat as needed but should ask to be reminded to hear the reading of the Megillah after their meal.425

418 Lev Avraham 23:3.
419 Mishnah Berurah 677:2.
421 Ibid., 24:1.
422 Shulchan Aruch OH 692:4 Rema.
423 Mishnah Berurah 692:14.
424 Ibid., 692:14; Beur Halachah s.v. “Miplag.”
425 Ibid., 692:16.
Megillah

3. A patient who is unable to attend synagogue to hear the Megillah should try to hear it with a Minyan.\(^{426}\) If this is not possible they should have someone read the Megillah for them, or they should read it themselves, from a kosher Megillah scroll and recite all the blessings before the reading,\(^{427}\) but not the blessing after.\(^{428}\)

4a. One who has already fulfilled the Mitzvah of reading the Megillah, and reads it again for the sake of someone who was unable to attend synagogue, may recite the blessing over reading the Megillah again.\(^{429}\)

4b. However, if the Megillah is being read for women only, the blessing should be changed to “Lishmoa Megillah” (to hear) instead of “Al Mikra Megillah” (over the reading of), because women are obligated only to hear the Megillah read, but not to read it themselves. It is ideal for one of the women in attendance to recite the blessings instead of the man who is reading if he has already fulfilled his obligation.\(^{430}\)

5. One who is in the hospital and is unable to find anyone who can read the Megillah for them and is too weak to read it on their own, may hear the Megillah over the phone and respond “Amen” to the blessings, even though in normal circumstances this is not permitted.\(^{431}\) If even this is not an option, one should read the Megillah from a printed text without reciting any blessings, though this would not fulfill the Mitzvah to hear the Megillah.\(^{432}\)

Mitzvot of Mishlo’ach Manot and Matanot Laevyonim

6a. One who is a patient in the hospital is still obligated to fulfill the other Mitzvot of Purim if possible. The patient should arrange for them to be performed on their behalf by another person.\(^{433}\)

6b. If possible, one would be allowed to trade a portion of their meal with another patient (assuming they both receive kosher meals and do not have any unique dietary restrictions)\(^{434}\) to fulfill the Mitzvah of Mishlo’ach Manot.\(^{435}\)

\(^{426}\) Shulchan Aruch OH 690:18.
\(^{427}\) Mishnah Berurah 692:8.
\(^{428}\) Shulchan Aruch OH 692:1 Rema; See also Nishmat Avraham OH 690:1.
\(^{429}\) Shulchan Aruch OH 692:3.
\(^{430}\) Mishnah Berurah 692:11; Chasdei Avraham Vol. 3, 24:4; See Nishmat Avraham OH 689:3 who notes that in some Sephardic communities the Megillah is read for women without a blessing while in others the Megillah is read for women with the same blessing of ”Al Mikra Megillah,” that is recited when the Megillah is read for men.
\(^{431}\) Chasdei Avraham vol. 3, 24:6; Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, 33. This should also apply to watching the live Megillah reading on the patient’s television set.
\(^{432}\) Shulchan Aruch OH 691:10.
\(^{433}\) Lev Avraham 24:6.
\(^{434}\) See Nishmat Avraham OH 695:1 that one would not fulfill the Mitzvah of Mishlo’ach Manot by sending food that the recipient is not permitted to eat due to their illness.
\(^{435}\) Ibid.
At Cedars-Sinai there is a public Megillah reading every year in the chapel for both Purim night and morning, which is also broadcast live on the patient televisions.

For those unable to attend the Megillah reading in our chapel, we arrange private Megillah readings in patient rooms upon request to the Spiritual Care office, 310 423 5550.

G. Passover

Passover is one of the most widely observed Jewish holidays. This eight-day springtime festival commemorates the exodus of the Jewish slaves from Egypt and their subsequent freedom. During Passover, no bread or other products of grain fermentation may be eaten or even owned by a traditionally observant Jew. Sabbath-like restrictions are observed on the first two and last two days of the holiday.

Seder

1a. One who is unable to have an entire Seder on Passover night or is busy taking care of a patient who is dangerously ill, should at least:

- Recite Kiddush and try to drink minimally 86 grams (3.03 ounces) of the cup while reclining.
- Then recite the “Avadim Hayinu” (“we were slaves”) section of the Haggadah, and if they are able to, the “Rabban Gamliel Haya Omer” (“Rabban Gamliel used to say”) section as well.
- Then drink a second cup while reclining after saying the blessing of “Asher Ga’alnu.”
- Then wash their hands and make the blessing of “Al Netillat Yadayim.”
- Then take three Matzot (two will suffice if they don’t have three), say the blessings of “Hamotzi” and “Al Achilat Matzah” and eat about 17-20 grams (0.6 - 0.7 oz.) within about 4-5 minutes, while reclining.
- If more time is available, one should eat some Maror after reciting the appropriate blessing, and eat it without reclining.
- At this point one may eat their meal and then the second Matzah for Afikoman, followed by the grace after meals, the blessing for the third cup and the blessing said after drinking the cup.436

436 Lev Avraham 20:1(1).
1b. If one would not have time to eat Matzah twice, before the meal and again for Afikoman, they should:

- Eat their entire meal without Matzah.
- At the end of the meal wash their hands without saying the blessing of “Al Netillat Yadayim.”
- Say the blessings of “Hamotzi” and “Al Achilat Matzah” and then eat the Matzah while reclining for the sake of both the Mitzvah of Matzah and the Mitzvah of Afikoman.
- One should then say the grace after meals and if possible, drink another cup and make the blessing after that.437

1c. If one has the strength to continue before midnight, they should drink the third cup (if they have not yet done so) with its appropriate blessing, say Hallel and then drink the fourth cup while reclining, and conclude with the blessing after drinking wine/grape juice. If possible, one should say the prayers of “Nishmat” and “Yishtabach,” as well as whatever else they had to skip in the Haggadah.438

2. One who may become busy taking care of a patient or for some reason does not think that they will be able to do the entire Seder at once, should make a condition from the outset that when they eat the Matzah, if they are interrupted and unable to return to their Seder, then the Matzah that they are eating now should also be counted as fulfilling the Mitzvah of Afikomen. But if they are able to return to the Seder before midnight, then the Matzah which they already ate should be considered a fulfillment of the Mitzvah of Matzah, and the Matzah they eat at the end of the meal (before midnight) will be to fulfill the Mitzvah of Afikomen. If they diverted their attention from the meal during the break, they will have to wash their hands and make “Hamotzi” again.

3a. If one is needed to care for a dangerously ill patient, they must do so and forgo their performance of the Seder.439 If one was unable to perform the Seder until after midnight, they may still do all of the Mitzvot of the night, but since it is questionable whether they are actually fulfilling the Mitzvot at this time, they do not say the blessings of “Al Achilat Matzah” or “Al Achilat Maror” on the Maror. In this case one should drink all four cups, but only say the blessings on the first and third cups.440

3b. If one was unable to do any of this and the entire night passes without having performed the Seder, it cannot be made up or performed at another time.441

---

437 Ibid., 20:1(2).
438 Ibid., 20:1 (3-4).
439 Ibid., 20:1.
440 Ibid., 20:1(7).
441 Magen Avraham OH 485:1; Shaarei Teshuvah 482 intro.
Wine, Maror & Matzah

4a. Although the “four cups” during the Seder are ideally fulfilled by drinking wine, one may use grape juice or another suitable beverage such as tea, coffee or juice if they are unable to drink wine or grape juice.

4b. One who is responsible for tending to a patient should not drink wine so that their concentration is not hampered.

5. One who is ill or very picky may choose any of the acceptable options for Maror that they prefer, such as romaine lettuce rather than horseradish, and may eat it little by little over the course of a few minutes. Even if they don’t like Maror, they should try their best to eat it. However, if it would be damaging to their health, they should try to simply eat a tiny bit or at least chew some in their mouth to get a taste of the bitterness (though in this case they would not make the blessing).

6. One who has difficulty chewing, swallowing or digesting Matzah in its normal state, may crush it into small pieces and eat it this way at the Seder. If eating it dry is too difficult, one may soften the Matzah by dipping it into water, or when absolutely necessary, in another beverage (but one must make sure that the Matzah does not disintegrate and liquefy).

7. If one vomits after eating Matzah, Maror, or drinking one of the cups, since they have already swallowed it they have fulfilled the Mitzvah and do not need to eat or drink again. However, if one has regurgitated all the Matzah that they ate, they will be unable to recite the grace after meals.

8. If drinking the cups, or eating Matzah or Maror will cause a patient to have internal illness or the need to lie down, they are exempt from the Mitzvah and should not do so.

9. One who is fed through a PEG or NG tube will be unable to fulfill these Mitzvot, but if possible they may listen to someone else make the appropriate blessings and have in mind to fulfill the Mitzvot in this manner.

10. One who has celiac disease and cannot eat gluten or any wheat may not eat Matzah if they know it will lead to illness, but should instead eat oat Matzah if possible. However, if this person does occasionally eat bread during the year, they should then have a Seder without Matzah, but at the end wash

---

442 Shulchan Aruch OH 472:10.
443 Lev Avraham 20:1(1) fn. 2 & 20:5.
444 Mishnah Berurah 472:37.
445 Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, 35.
446 Lev Avraham 20:1(1) fn. 2.
447 Ibid., 20:2 based on Mishnah Berurah 473:43.
448 Ibid., 20:3 based on responsa Binyan Tzion 29 and Mishnah Berurah 461:18.
449 Ibid., 20:4.
450 Ibid., 20:6; Mishnah Berurah 472:35; Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 32 fn. 73; It should be pointed out that if one is not sick and one only dislikes or is mildly harmed by these substances, he or she must nevertheless consume them (Shulchan Aruch OH 472:10).
their hands without reciting a blessing, then say the blessings of “Hamotzi” and “Al Achilat Matzah” and then eat the minimum amount of Matzah (as described in paragraph 1a above) while reclining, for the sake of both the Mitzvah of Matzah and the Mitzvah of Afikoman.452

11. If one is unable to recline, they are not obligated to do so.453

12. One who is unable to eat the proper amount of Matzah or Maror within the minimum time (discussed above) should eat it without reciting the appropriate blessing.454 If their doctor advises them not to eat Matzah, Maror or wine and they do so anyway, they have committed a transgression and not a Mitzvah.455

Chametz & Kitniyot

13. A patient who is not seriously ill may not take, or even have in their possession, any pleasant-tasting medicine such as lozenges or syrup, if they contain any Chametz at all.456

14. However, a non-seriously ill patient may swallow pills or capsules that are unpalatable, and may have them in their possession, even if they contain a Chametz ingredient.457 (There are many Israeli-produced medicines that are certified Kosher for Passover.)

15a. A patient who is dangerously ill, or even just potentially so [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], may eat or drink Chametz food if they are specifically required by the physician for one’s healing, even if it is not certain that it will cure the patient, unless there is a non-Chametz alternative. One is obligated to consume Chametz if this is what their doctor has prescribed for the sake of saving their life.458

15b. Since medications containing Chametz may sometimes be taken on Passover when necessary, one should consult their physician and rabbi to discuss their case. For example, all medications for a heart condition, diabetes, abnormal blood pressure, stroke, kidney disease, lung disease, depression, epilepsy, the immune system (transplant anti-rejection), and cancer treatment (including precautionary) may be taken on Passover. Furthermore, all prescription medication taken on a regular basis for chronic conditions should only be changed with the consultation of one’s physician (if one cannot reach his or her physician, they should continue to take their regular prescription and not change). Some examples of such chronic conditions include any psychiatric condition, prostate condition, Crohn’s disease, colitis, high cholesterol, Parkinson’s disease, anemia, multiple sclerosis, thyroid condition and asthma (Rabbi Gershon Bess, A Passover Guide to Cosmetics and Medications, Kollel-Los Angeles 2011, Intro.).

452 Guide for the Jewish Hospital Patient, 35.
453 Ibid., 20:10.
454 Nishmat Avraham OH pg. 342 (8); Maharam Shik OH 260; Minchat Yitzchak 4:102(2).
455 Ibid.
456 Ivrit Lev Avraham 20:12.
457 Ibid.
458 Ibid., 20:11.
16. Although Ashkenazim do not eat Kitniyot (rice, beans or any leguminous vegetables) on Passover, a non-seriously ill patient or a child suffering from a condition, such as diarrhea, whose doctor says they must eat one of these products, like rice or corn flour, may do so.459

17. Since most pills and capsules are made of starch or amylum which are made of Kitniyot, but do not contain any Chametz (and even if they do contain Chametz, assuming it is unpalatable), even a non-seriously ill patient may take them on Passover.460 One should not be strict and discontinue necessary medication on Passover if they have been advised by a doctor to take it on Passover, particularly if there is any chance that discontinuing the medication may lead to any possible danger to the patient.461

18. Alcohol based hand sanitizers, such as Purell, typically contain ethyl alcohol, which may be Chametz. However, since it is inedible (like liquid soap) and the alcohol content is denatured, these products may be used on Passover.462

Searching for & Selling Chametz

19. There is a requirement to search for Chametz on the night of the fourteenth of Nissan by the owner of a property, or the tenant if the premises are rented.463 One who is unable to be at home at this time may appoint a representative to do the search for them.464

20. If one does not have anybody available to do the search for them, and they will be leaving their home before the fourteenth (but within thirty days of Passover), then they must do the search and nullification of Chametz the night before they leave their house, without reciting the blessing.465

21. One is not required to do a “Bedikat Chametz” (search for leavened products) in their hospital room since they do not own it, but they should check all of their possessions to make sure that they do not have any Chametz amongst their belongings, and one should also check any areas designated for the patients’ personal use, such as closets, the night table, and drawers. A blessing would not be made on this search.466

22. A person can do “Bittul Chametz” (nullification of leavened products) in their hospital room, and make a statement to the effect that they do not intend to automatically acquire any Chametz that might be in their hospital room. If they find Chametz in the room over Passover, they can assume it is abandoned.

460 Ibid., 20:14.
461 Ibid., based on Mishnah Torah, Yesodei Hatorah 5:8; Shulchan Aruch YD 155:3 & Shach 13, Chazon Ish OH 116:8; Minchat Shlomo 1:17, Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 40 fn. 169.
462 Rabbi Dovid Cohen, Sappirim (Published by the CRC - Chicago Rabbinical Council), April 2008, Issue 12 pg. 4 in the name of Rav Gedalia Dov Schwartz.
463 Shulchan Aruch OH 437:1.
464 Shulchan Aruch OH 432:2 & Mishnah Berurah 8, 11; Shulchan Aruch OH 436:1. This representative is ideally an adult male, but may also be a woman or a responsible child, Mishnah Berurah 436:1, 437:18-19.
465 Shulchan Aruch OH 436:1.
466 Rav Yiztchak Zilberstein, Torat Hayoledet, 277.
If they would like to avoid inadvertent consumption, they can cover it on the holiday, or destroy it on Chol Hamoed.\footnote{Shulchan Aruch OH 446:1, Mishnah Berurah 435:5.}

Sefirat HaOmer

23. Although one must count the Omer every single night in order to be permitted to do so with the blessing, even if one knows that they will be having surgery, or for some reason will not be able to count every day of the Omer, they should still begin counting the Omer for as long as they are able to with a blessing, and then if they miss some days, continue counting without making the blessing.\footnote{Lev Avraham 20:16 based on Halichot Shlomo, Moadim 11:9.}

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Cedar-Sinai’s kosher kitchen is Kashered and prepared for Passover under the supervision of the Rabbinical Council of California. All kosher food served from the Cedar-Sinai kitchen on Passover is fully “Kosher L’Pesach.”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• The food is “Gebrukts” and the dairy is “Chalav Stam” (with the exception of the yogurt, which is “Chalav Yisrael”).</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Matzah, a Seder plate, and a Haggadah are available upon request, as well as additional Seder supplies.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• See the box in Chapter II at the end of the section “I. Kiddush” for an explanation of the Cedar-Sinai policy on wine and liquor and how to obtain them.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

H. Fast Days (other than Tisha B’Av & Yom Kippur)

There are four annual “minor” fast days on which traditionally observant Jews refrain from eating or drinking from dawn until nightfall that same day. In addition to these days, some Jews fast on other specific days throughout the year, such as the day before Passover, “Ta’anit B’chorot.”

1a. A sick person in the category of non-life-threatening serious illness [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept] should not fast on the Fast of Gedalyah, Tenth of Tevet or the Seventeenth of Tammuz, even if they wish to fast.\footnote{Mishnah Berurah 550:4.}

1b. There is room for those who are not well to be even more lenient with regard to fasting on Taanit Esther than on the above three fast days.\footnote{Shulchan Aruch OH 686:2, Rema.}

2. A woman who is pregnant or nursing is also not obligated to fast on these days, particularly if the fast distresses her. If fasting distresses her a great deal it is forbidden for her to fast. However, only enough food should be

\begin{enumerate}
\item \textit{Shulchan Aruch OH} 446:1, \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 435:5.
\item \textit{Lev Avraham} 20:16 based on \textit{Halichot Shlomo, Moadim} 11:9.
\item \textit{Mishnah Berurah} 550:4.
\item \textit{Shulchan Aruch OH} 686:2, \textit{Rema}.
\end{enumerate}
eaten to ensure the well-being of the pregnant woman or the nursing mother and her child, rather than a hearty meal.\textsuperscript{471}

3. A healthy person who is fasting and suffers pain, such as a headache, may take pain-relief pills without water as long as there is not a good flavor associated with the medication. If it does have flavor, it may only be taken in capsule form (or wrapped in thin paper).\textsuperscript{472}

I. Tisha B’Av

\textit{Tisha B’Av} is a fast of more than 24 hours, commemorating the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem. The three weeks leading up to \textit{Tisha B’Av} begin this season of mourning, which intensifies nine days before the fast, and even more during the week of the fast, culminating in this day of solemnity, prayer and various ritual observances.

1a. Although it is customary to refrain from hot baths during the nine days prior to \textit{Tisha B’Av}, a pregnant woman or anyone who is ill may take a hot bath during this time if it gives relief or comfort,\textsuperscript{473} though this should not be done on \textit{Tisha B’Av} itself.\textsuperscript{474}

1b. Although it is customary to abstain from eating meat or drinking wine during the week or nine days leading up to \textit{Tisha B’Av} (with the exclusion of Shabbat),\textsuperscript{475} a patient suffering from even a minor illness [see ch. I. Sec. A, for an explanation of this concept], is permitted meat and wine if necessary.\textsuperscript{476}

1c. One who must eat animal protein during these days should choose poultry over red meat, unless such meat is more advisable for health reasons, in which case it should be eaten.\textsuperscript{477}

1d. One who must have a surgery or procedure during this time period may do so, unless it is elective and can wait, in which case it should be postponed until after \textit{Tisha B’Av}.\textsuperscript{478}

2a. One who is suffering minor discomfort must still fast.\textsuperscript{479} However, one who is sick (bedridden), even with a non-life-threatening illness [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], need not fast on \textit{Tisha B’Av} and may eat what is necessary in their normal manner.\textsuperscript{480} However, one who is healthy but has reason to fear that fasting will lead to illness, should eat only in measurements (see chapter on \textit{Yom Kippur}, “Eating in ‘Measurements’”).\textsuperscript{481}

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{471} Shulchan Aruch OH 554:5; Mishnah Berurah 550:5; Shaar Hatziyun 550:3; Lev Avraham 21:5.
\item \textsuperscript{472} Lev Avraham 21:8.
\item \textsuperscript{473} Mishnah Berurah 551:88.
\item \textsuperscript{474} Ibid., Shaar Hatziyun 94.
\item \textsuperscript{475} Shulchan Aruch OH 551:9, though Sefardim begin these prohibitions only on Rosh Chodesh Av.
\item \textsuperscript{476} Mishnah Berurah 551:61, though rarely would wine be necessary.
\item \textsuperscript{477} Mishnah Berurah 551:64.
\item \textsuperscript{478} Torat Hayoledet, 308.
\item \textsuperscript{479} Aruch Hashulchan OH 554:7.
\item \textsuperscript{480} Shulchan Aruch OH 554:11.
\item \textsuperscript{481} Lev Avraham 22:4 in the name of Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach.
\end{itemize}
2b. One who only needs to drink but can get by without eating, for example to prevent a kidney stone, should drink something but not eat. If they must drink normal amounts they may do so; otherwise, they should drink only in measurements.482

2c. One who needs to eat should try to eat later than usual so that they fast for at least some time, unless it would be dangerous for them to do so.483 One who must eat should also consume only the amount needed for their physical well-being.484

3. One who has been ill and has now recovered, but is still very weak and in great pain and there is concern that their illness will return, should eat as they regularly do, but should at least avoid eating sweets.485

4. One who is experiencing difficulty with their retina, such that dehydration resulting from fasting could lead to loss of vision, even though this is not life-threatening, may drink as their doctor advises (but not eat).486

5a. One who is healthy and is fasting, but would like to take a pill to relieve pain, such as from a headache, may take a pill without water, as long as it does not have a good flavor. However, one may not take a pill if they have enjoyment from it in their mouth or throat.487

5b. One who is a “Choleh She’ain Bo Sakana,” (non-life-threatening serious illness) [see ch. I. Sec. B, for an explanation of this concept], whose doctor orders them to continue taking their medication on Tisha B’av, but is not able to swallow it without water, may take some water (the smallest quantity necessary) to help them swallow the pill.488 Alternatively, one may follow the guidelines in the chapter on Yom Kippur, section titled, “Taking Medication on Yom Kippur” # 1.

i. Pregnancy and Childbirth

1a. A pregnant woman who feels well should fast on Tisha B’av regardless of which month of pregnancy she is in.489

1b. However, if she does not feel well, or did not feel well at the beginning of her pregnancy, she should not fast.490

1c. A pregnant woman who feels well, but is weak and is afraid that she will become ill as a result of fasting, should eat in measurements (see chapter on Yom Kippur, “Eating in ‘Measurements’”).491

---

482 Ibid.
484 Chayei Adam 135:2.
485 Ibid., 22:3.
487 Ibid.
488 Ibid., 22:5.
489 Shulchan Aruch OH 554:5; Rema 550:1; Lev Avraham 22:2.
490 Mishnah Berurah 554:3 & Shaar Hatziyun 2.
491 Lev Avraham 22:2, in the name of Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach.
2. A woman who is nursing and is afraid that she won’t produce sufficient milk as a result of fasting, and the baby does not drink formula, should drink normal amounts of fluids, unless she can produce enough milk by drinking only in measurements (see chapter on Yom Kippur, “Eating in ‘Measurements’”).

3. One who has just given birth is not obligated to fast within thirty days of the birth, and should not fast during the first seven days, even if she feels capable. One who miscarried after forty days since conception has the same ruling as a woman who has recently given birth.

---

492 Ibid.
IV. Laws Related to Food & Meals

A. Washing One’s Hands Prior to a Meal

Before eating bread, one is required to wash their hands with water in a ritual manner. In addition to ensuring physical cleanliness, this symbolizes the removal of defilement and impurity, and the restoration of spiritual cleanliness and preparation. It is also a reminder of the ancient Temple service in which the “Kohen” was required to wash his hands before the daily ritual.

1. If one of a person’s hands is partially bandaged, one should wash however much of their hand they are able to and recite the blessing of “Al Netilat Yadayim.” Similarly, if one entire hand is unable or not allowed to become wet, one may wash only the other hand and still recite the blessing of “Al Netilat Yadayim.” In such a case, the hand that is not washed should be covered with a glove or a cloth so that it does not directly touch any food during the meal.

2a. If one is unable to wash their own hands, anyone is permitted to pour the water over their hands for them.

2b. If a patient is fed bread by an attendant, it is the patient and not the attendant whose hands should be washed, even though the patient does not handle the bread. If the patient has no hands and thus does not touch the bread, then he or she does not need to wash at all, as in a case of a person eating with gloves on both hands.

3. If one is unable to pour water on their hands and has no one to do it for them, it is not sufficient to simply place one’s hands under a faucet without using a utensil. Thus, in such a case, one may only eat bread if they are wearing a glove or a cloth on their hands when they touch it.

4. One is generally not permitted to perform religious activities in a restroom, including washing their hands before prayer or eating bread (although there is more room for leniency in the case of washing hands before prayer). However, in a case of great need in which one has nowhere else to wash their hands, some authorities permit washing them in the restroom, provided they dry them and make the blessing outside of the restroom.

495 Shulchan Aruch OH 162:10 & Mishnah Berurah 68; Yechaveh Daat 2:19; Lev Avraham 8:1.
496 Mishnah Berurah 162:69; Lev Avraham 8:1.
497 Shulchan Aruch OH 159:11.
498 Ibid., 163:2; Nishmat Avraham OH 163:2(2).
499 Lev Avraham 8:4.
500 Igrot Moshe, EH 1:114.
501 Minchat Yitzchak 1:60; Yechaveh Daat, 3:1.
B. Blessings

1a. If one takes a drink of water because they were instructed to do so by their doctor or in order to swallow pills, but not because of thirst, they do not make a blessing before or after.502

1b. If one drinks water in order to swallow a pill, but then becomes thirsty and drinks more water, they would need to make a blessing beforehand, and afterwards if they drink enough water to become obligated to recite the blessing after consuming liquids (about 3 ounces) after they became thirsty.503

1c. If one takes medicine with a liquid that has a good flavor, or any beverage other than water, they must make the appropriate blessings before and after, even though they only drank the liquid for medicinal purposes (i.e., to help them swallow a pill) because they have some enjoyment from the taste.504

2. One who is not fed through their mouth, but by something like an NG tube or a PEG, does not make a blessing before or after they are fed because it is not considered “eating.”505

3. If there is a foul odor in the room such that one cannot make a blessing, they may have the blessing in mind and then eat or drink.506

C. Medication

1a. A patient who is not seriously ill may swallow medication unfit for consumption as human food, i.e. pills, even if derived from non kosher ingredients if this is required for their healing. If possible, it is preferred that one find a kosher alternative (there are many Israeli-produced medicines that are certified kosher).507

1b. It is preferable to take a non kosher medicine in pill form, rather than as a pleasant-tasting medicine such as chewable tablets.508 One should not take pleasant-tasting liquid medications containing non kosher ingredients without first checking with a rabbinic authority.

2. There is additional room for leniency when it comes to allowing children to take pleasant-tasting medicines.509

502 Shulchan Aruch OH 204:7; Lev Avraham 10:3.
503 Lev Avraham, Ibid.
504 Shulchan Aruch OH 204:8 & Mishnah Berurah 43 The Shaar Hatziyun 37 explains that this is true even if the flavor is not very good, as long as it palatable: Lev Avraham 10:2-3.
505 Lev Avraham 10:7 based on Minchat Chinuch 313:2 and others.
506 Torat Hayoledet pg. 427; Mishnah Berurah 62:8.
507 Lev Avraham 12:2-3; Shulchan Aruch YD 155:3. Exceptions to this ruling include meat cooked with dairy products and actual Chametz during Passover unless such products are needed as a life-saving measure.
508 See Minchat Shlomo 1:17, where Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach rules that swallowing medicine pills does not constitute an act of eating because they are made to be swallowed and are intended only for sick individuals, and thus swallowing them is regarded as abnormal benefit and is permissible even for a patient who is not seriously ill. Furthermore, Rav Waldenburg notes that medications are generally only a rabbinic prohibition because they are taken in such small doses (Tzitz Eliezer 6:16).
D. Meat & Milk

1. Although it is the generally accepted custom to wait six hours before eating dairy products after eating meat, a non-seriously ill patient, a woman within thirty days of childbirth, a pregnant woman suffering discomfort because of her pregnancy, or a nursing mother with insufficient milk, may wait only one hour after eating meat if necessary. However, they should make sure to recite the appropriate blessing after eating the meat meal and rinse their mouth out before proceeding to eat dairy products.\(^{510}\)

2. One who takes a pill made of meat products, such as liver extract, does not need to wait six hours before eating dairy.\(^{511}\)

- Cedars-Sinai is proud to have its own on-site kosher kitchen under the strict Orthodox rabbinical supervision of the Rabbinical Council of California (RCC). The RCC is one of the most prominent Kashrut agencies, and a member of the Association of Kosher Kashrus Overseers.
- All kosher food is prepared on the premises in our kosher kitchen, supervised by a “Mashgiach Tamidi.” It is then warmed up in the galleys on each floor.
- Our meat comes from various vendors, but it is all Glatt Kosher and RCC approved.
- All produce used in the kosher kitchen has been verified to be bug free.
- All dairy items are “Cholov Stam,” with the exception of the cheese wedges, which are “Cholov Yisrael.”
- All bread is “Pas Yisrael” (including the bread mixed into the meat loaf) except for the individually sliced white and wheat bread that goes on patient trays.
- The rye bread is also Yoshon; all other types of bread may not be Yoshon.
- The bread rolls are “Hamotzi,” not “Mezonot.”
- On Shabbat, staff will be prepared to take your verbal order, so that you do not have to write anything. Since all food is reheated in a permissible manner on Shabbat, one may order every kosher item, including soups, on Shabbat for a patient.
- On Shabbat, grape juice and Challah (dinner bread rolls) can be ordered with one’s meals or through the Spiritual Care office (extension 35550).
- Regardless of which Kashrut symbol appears on a packaged item, the Kashrut of all items served on the kosher menu is assured by the RCC.

\(^{510}\) Lev Avraham, 12:5.
\(^{511}\) Igrot Moshe YD2:26.
All Ocean Spray tetra packed juice drinks are special-run juices. They do not reflect the general policy of Ocean Spray and are completely acceptable.

- Meals often include both hot and cold items. One should always confirm that all items are sealed and labeled as kosher in order to be certain that no non-kosher item was accidentally placed on the meal tray.

- The staff is instructed not to mix meat and dairy products, but to be certain, one should also check to confirm that all meal items correspond with one another, i.e., are all “meat” or “dairy,” and not inadvertently mixed by the employee preparing the tray.

- The Mashgiach turns on all ovens and even the flames of the stoves, not just the pilot. He also often attempts to do an action in the cooking process of the food as well.
V. Prayer

Traditionally observant Jews pray three times a day and also recite a number of other prayers at various times, such as after a meal. These prayers are usually said quietly, moving one’s lips but without speaking loudly enough for others to hear. While praying, one refrains from any interruptions, even if someone else tries to get one’s attention.

1. Although one is supposed to wash one’s hands after sleep and before prayer, if one is unable to get to water or have it brought to their bed, one should instead thoroughly wipe one’s hands on a cloth or garment and then say the blessing, “Al Netillat Yadayim.” If water becomes available later, they should then wash their hands but not say the blessing again.

2. Although one who is healthy is not supposed to eat or drink anything (other than water, tea or coffee) before saying the morning prayers, one who is ill may do so. However, if possible, even someone who is ill should at least say the morning blessings and the first paragraph of the Shema before eating anything. On Shabbat one must also hear Kiddush before eating.

3a. A patient who is unable to speak should still pray through thoughts alone, without words, if that is possible.

3b. One who is too weak to pray can also listen to another person say the prayers and respond “Amen” to the blessings.

4. One who is too weak to say all of the prayers is exempt from praying, but should at least say the morning blessings and the Shema, or at least its first verse. One who is able to pray a little bit more, but not the entire standard Shmoneh Esreh prayer, should instead say the “Havinenu” substitute for the middle thirteen blessings.

5a. Although one is normally supposed to stand while reciting the Shmoneh Esreh prayer without leaning on anything, if one is unable to stand but can concentrate while leaning on something, they may do so. One who is unable to stand, even while leaning for support, may recite the Shmoneh Esreh while seated. If unable to sit, one may recite it reclining, preferably

---

513 Shulchan Aruch OH 89:3 & Mishnah Berurah 21-22.
514 Ibid., 89:4.
515 Ibid., 92:3; Lev Avraham 5:15.
516 Lev Avraham 5:15.
518 Shulchan Aruch OH, 594:1 Rema.
519 Mishnah Berurah 94:21; Lev Avraham 5:30.
520 Shulchan Aruch OH 110:1; This prayer is found on pg. 1005 of the Koren siddur found in our Chapel.
521 Ibid., 94:8.
523 Ibid.
with their head and shoulders elevated. If this is not possible either, one should lie on their side, even if just slightly. If even this is impossible, one may pray while lying flat on one’s back.

5b. A patient who could stand, but is able to pray better while seated or lying down, may do so, but should try to stand during the times that one bows during the Shmoneh Esreh.

6. One who recites the Shmoneh Esreh prayer while seated in a wheelchair should ideally move it backwards (or ask someone to move it) the distance of three steps at the conclusion of the Shmoneh Esreh, as they would when reciting it while standing.

7a. When praying, one should see oneself as standing with a sense of trepidation before a King. One should therefore not wear only pajamas if possible, and should have their entire body covered while praying.

7b. A man should not pray in only a hospital gown, but must also have a physical separation such as a bathrobe belt or underwear at the waist.

8. Although one who is in the midst of reciting the Shmoneh Esreh prayer is not permitted to interrupt it in any manner, one who has a hypoglycemic attack (sudden onset of low blood sugar levels) during prayer may interrupt their prayers to eat and must make the appropriate blessing on the item, and may then continue in their prayers from the point at which they interrupted.

Earliest time for Prayer, Tallit, Tefillin

9. The earliest time that one may recite the blessing for putting on his Tallit and Tefillin is when there is enough daylight to allow one to recognize an acquaintance from a distance of four “Amot” (about seven feet) and can distinguish between sky-blue and white. This time is referred to as “Mi’sheyakir.” The exact time depends on a number of factors, such as location and season, but is generally accepted as approximately 50 minutes before sunrise.

10. Although the Shema and its blessings should also be said after “Mi’sheyakir,” if one is unable to wait until then, they may be said as early as dawn (“Alot Hashachar”), which is about 72 minutes before sunrise, but the exact time can vary throughout the year.
11. The Shmoneh Esreh is ideally said at sunrise, but in a case of need may also be said as early as dawn (“Alot Hashachar”).

12. A patient who must pray early, such as one who is having a surgery early in the morning and will not be able to pray or put on Tallit or Tefillin that day following the procedure, may begin praying after dawn (“Alot Hashachar”) up until the blessing of “Yotzer Or” in the first blessing of the Shema, and once they have reached the time of “Mi’sheyakir” may put on their Tallit (and Tefillin if it is not Shabbat), make the appropriate blessings and continue with their prayers. If this is also not possible, one may put on their Tallit and Tefillin (without the blessings) and say all of the morning prayers as early as “Alot Hashachar.” If even this is not possible, and one would like to say some prayers with their Tallit and Tefillin on even before “Alot Hashachar,” they may do so, but may not recite their blessings when putting them on, and may only say the morning prayers after “Alot Hashachar.”

Prayer in an unclean environment

13. One is not permitted to pray or study Torah in the immediate presence of feces or urine, unless it is covered (for this purpose, even a see-through plastic receptacle may serve as a cover) and no foul odor is present.

14. A patient who is in a place where it is not permitted to pray because of a foul odor, and who is unable to leave that room, may not pray or even think the prayers, but should think to themselves that they would like to pray if they could, but are not allowed to. If the room becomes clean while there is still time in the day, one should then say their prayers.

15. A patient with a catheter in their bladder through which urine passes into a bag may pray and study Torah provided that there is no foul odor emanating from it.

16. A patient with an ileostomy or colostomy, by which an opening is created to provide an alternative channel for feces to leave their body, may continue to pray and study Torah as they normally would, as long as the opening is covered and does not omit a foul odor. One should clean and cover the site before beginning to pray or study Torah.

17. One should be very careful to respect the holiness of sacred books. Therefore, if one is going to relieve themselves by their bedside, for example, and they have holy books beside their bed, they should cover the books. However, if the table is

---

538 Shulchan Aruch OH 89:1&8.
539 Ibid., 58:3; Mishnah Berurah 58:13; Beur Halachah s.v. “Zman.”
540 Mishnat Avraham OH 58:1 (based on Mishnah Berurah 58:16).
541 Ibid.
542 Shulchan Aruch OH 76:1.
543 Ibid., 77:1 & Mishnah Berurah 2; Mishnah Berurah 79:2, Beur Halachah s.v. “Tzoah;” Shulchan Aruch OH 76:1; Shulchan Aruch OH 87:3.
544 Shulchan Aruch OH 62:4 Rema.
545 Mishnah Berurah 62:9; Beur Halachah 76:8 s.v. “Tzarich.”
546 Lev Avraham 5:25.
547 Ibid., 5:26.
four by four “Tefachim” (a “Tefach” is about 3.5 inches) and has solid sides (rather than legs) that are at least ten “Tefachim” high, one need not be concerned about covering the books since they are located in a different and distinct space from a Halachic perspective.548

A. Tefillin

Tefillin (phylacteries) are black boxes worn on the arm and head of male worshippers during weekday morning prayers. These boxes contain writings from the Torah, are considered holy and should be treated with utmost care.

1. The Mitzvah of Tefillin consists of two separate commandments, one pertaining to the one worn on the arm (referred to herein as “Tefillin of the hand”), and the other, to the one worn on the head (“Tefillin of the head”). Therefore, one who is unable to put on both, must still put on whichever one he can.549

2a. If one is right-handed or ambidextrous, Tefillin are placed on the left arm. If a right-handed man puts his Tefillin on his right arm, he has not fulfilled the Mitzvah of putting on Tefillin.550 One who is left-handed puts his Tefillin on his right arm.551 Thus, throughout this chapter whenever we refer to the left arm, we mean whichever arm is not dominant.

2b. Although Tefillin of the hand should be placed over the lower half of the biceps, one who is unable to place Tefillin on that part of his arm may place it over the upper half of the bicep and make the blessing.552

2c. One who does not have a forearm from the elbow downward should nevertheless put on the Tefillin of the hand.553 When one then puts on their Tefillin of the head, they should make both blessings and have the Tefillin of the hand in mind as well.554

2d. One who has most of his arm, but no hand, still puts Tefillin on that arm and says the blessing in the normal manner.555

2e. One whose arm is missing the entire part of the upper arm bone usually covered by the biceps should not put his hand Tefillin on any stump that remains on his left arm. Such a person would be exempt from putting on the Tefillin of the hand, but may put Tefillin on his right arm without reciting the blessing.556

548 Ibid., 6:12.
549 Shulchan Aruch OH 26:1.
551 Ibid., 27:1 & Mishnah Berurah 4.
552 Ibid., 27:1 Rema.
553 Beur Halacha 27:1 s.v. “B’lo Bracha.”
554 Mishnah Berurah 27:5.
555 Ibid., 27:6.

2f. One who must put Tefillin on his right arm generally does not make the blessing if he puts them on his left arm. However, since Ashkenazim recite two blessings on Tefillin, they should recite both of the blessings on the head Tefillin, with the intention that the blessing “Lehanich Tefillin” applies to the Tefillin of the hand as well.557

3. One for whom it is very painful to put Tefillin on his arm is exempt from putting on the Tefillin of the hand (even if there is room on the arm to do so), and should thus put on only the Tefillin of the head.558

4a. One who puts on only Tefillin of the head and not the arm should:
   - If he is Sephardi, recite only the blessing of “Al Mitzvat Tefillin.”
   - If he is Ashkenazi, recite both “Lehanich Tefillin” and “Al Mitzvat Tefillin.”559

4b. One who puts on only Tefillin of the arm, and not the head, should recite only the blessing of “Lehanich Tefillin” according to both Sephardi and Ashkenazi practice.560

5. One whose middle finger of the left hand has been amputated should wind the strap around his index finger instead.561

6a. Nothing should be between one’s body and the Tefillin. One whose IV tubes make it impossible to wind Tefillin around his arm seven times as he normally does, should still put Tefillin on his left arm, but should simply strap the box to his bicep and then draw the strap directly down to his middle finger, without winding it around his forearm. The blessing is nevertheless made when putting Tefillin on in this manner, even if it is strapped only to the bicep, and not to any of one’s forearm or finger.562

6b. A person whose left arm is in a plaster cast should still put Tefillin on that arm and not their right arm. As long as the box of the Tefillin is in contact with his skin, even if the straps are wrapped around the cast, he may make the blessing over fulfilling the Mitzvah of Tefillin in this manner.563 However, if the box itself is on the cast and not directly touching his skin, he may recite only the blessing for the Tefillin of the head.564

6c. If a cast, bandage, or the like covers the entire area designated for the hand Tefillin, the Tefillin can be placed on top of it,565 but without reciting the blessing. However, since Ashkenazim recite two blessings on Tefillin, they should recite both of the blessings on the head Tefillin, with the intention

557 Beur Halachah 27:1 s.v. “B’lo Bracha.”
558 Mishnah Berurah 27:29.
559 Shulchan Aruch OH 26:2 Rema; Beur Halacha 27:1 s.v. “B’lo.”
560 Shulchan Aruch OH 26:2 Rema.
561 Lev Avraham 4:5.
562 Ibid., 4:4.
563 Ibid., 4:3; Mishnah Berurah 27:16, 18.
564 Ibid.
that the blessing “Lehaniach Tefillin” applies to the Tefillin of the hand as well.566 Sephardim just make the blessing of “Al Mitzvat Tefillin” on their head Tefillin. When the hand Tefillin is worn in this manner, it should be covered by a shirt, jacket or other garment, but it may never be worn over a shirt or other garment.567

7. If one’s left arm is paralyzed,568 or has hand atrophy, he should still put Tefillin on that arm.569 However, if in addition to suffering paralysis, the arm has completely lost all sensation, it is considered not to exist for these purposes and he should put Tefillin on his other arm.570

8. If both arms are paralyzed, he should have Tefillin put on his left arm for him by someone else,571 and recite the blessings as he normally does.572

9. If there is no man available to assist one in putting on Tefillin, he may allow a woman to put them on him, and he may make the blessing.573

10. One whose head is bandaged should still put on his head Tefillin. If he is Sephardi, a blessing is not made on the head Tefillin. An Ashkenazi would make the blessing, “Al Mitzvat Tefillin” in such a case only if the box of the Tefillin lies in direct contact with the head, even if the straps are on top of the bandage. However, if the box lies on the bandage, he does not recite the blessing.574

11. One suffering from an illness should put Tefillin on only if he is able to concentrate on the Mitzvah.575 While wearing Tefillin he must also maintain a clean body.576 If he is suffering from severe diarrhea, or flatulence that makes him unable to avoid passing gas, he may not put Tefillin on.577

12. It is forbidden to sleep, or even take a nap, while wearing Tefillin.578

---

- There are pairs of kosher Tefillin (both Sefard & Ashkenaz) in the Cedars-Sinai Spiritual Care office, which are available upon request.

---

566 Beur Halachah 27:1 s.v. “B’lo.”
567 Mishnah Berurah 27:16.
568 Igrot Moshe OH1:8-9.
569 Lev Avraham 4:7.
570 Ibid., 4:8; Nishmat Avraham EH 169:5.
571 Mishnah Berurah 27:6,22.
573 Ibid., 4:10.
574 Mishnah Berurah 27:16.
575 Shulchan Aruch OH 38:1 Rema.
576 Mishnah Berurah 38:2.
577 Shulchan Aruch OH 38:1.
578 Ibid., 44:1. The Shulchan Aruch there suggests that one who can’t avoid momentary sleep while wearing Tefillin should put a cloth over their Tefillin. If one is unable to avoid dozing off while wearing Tefillin, they should consult a rabbinic authority for guidance.
VI. Interactions with Individuals of the Opposite Gender

Judaism generally prohibits a man and a woman who are not immediate relatives from being alone together, or any sort of physical contact. Caregivers should be cognizant of these sensitivities and avoid isolation or physical contact with a traditionally observant Jewish patient or arrange for a caregiver of the same gender if possible. These rules were established to promote modesty and appropriate behavior, and to prevent any chance of improper conduct or accusations of such. These rules should not be misinterpreted as an inference of superiority or inferiority between the sexes. In professional and medical situations, there are occasionally some exceptions to these rules, as discussed below.

A. Seclusion ("Yichud")

1a. Although it is forbidden for people of the opposite gender to be secluded together, a patient may be in the room with their doctor or nurse of the opposite gender if the door remains unlocked and it is possible, and indeed not unlikely, that another person may enter at any time.579

1b. Some permit such seclusion even if the door is locked, as long as there are people around with the key who can easily enter at any moment.580

1c. In all cases it is best to avoid being in private with an individual of the opposite gender and it is preferable that another reliable person, such as a nurse or member of the patient's family, be present in the room.581

2a. A married woman may travel alone in an ambulance with a male driver, even at night within the city, assuming her husband is in that city. However, if they are traveling outside of the city, or the woman is single, they may do so only if it is possible to see into the ambulance through its windows.582

2b. If the patient is seriously ill, they may travel in an ambulance even in violation of the laws of seclusion.583

2c. If a person is afraid to travel in the ambulance alone or wants to avoid violating the prohibition against seclusion, someone else may travel in the ambulance with them, even on Shabbat and even if the driver is Jewish.584

3. It is permitted to visit an individual of the opposite gender in the hospital, but one should be cognizant of modesty and avoid being secluded in the room with the patient.585

581 Ibid., 34:32.
582 Ibid., 49:7; Nishmat Avraham EH 22:8 & 4a.
583 Ibid., 49:8; Nishmat Avraham EH 22:1.
584 Ibid., 49:8 in the name of Rav Shlomo Zalman Auerbach.
585 Ibid., 31:2 based on Aruch Hashulchan YD 335:11.
B. Physical Contact

1. Jewish Law prohibits a man and a woman from any physical contact, including shaking hands, even if one of the people is ill.\textsuperscript{586}

2. However, physicians or nurses are permitted to make physical contact with a patient of the opposite gender in the course of medical examinations if necessary.\textsuperscript{587}

3. Another exception occurs when a person is very fearful: an individual of the opposite gender may then hold one's hand or touch their head in order to calm or strengthen their spirit. In such a situation, it would be best to touch clothing or use a glove in order to avoid touching the person's skin directly.\textsuperscript{588}

4. More restrictions are placed on treating patients with gastro-intestinal or gynecological issues, particularly with men treating women in such situations, out of fear that indecency might occur when a man must clean a woman or help her to the bathroom, thus coming into constant bodily contact.\textsuperscript{589} Each situation is unique and one should consult a rabbi to discuss the specifics.

\textsuperscript{586} Ibid., 34:4.
\textsuperscript{587} Nishmat Avraham YD 195:17(11) quoting the Shach YD 195:20.
\textsuperscript{588} Ibid., in the name of Rav Yehoshua Neuwirth.
\textsuperscript{589} Shulchan Aruch YD 335:10; Nishmat Avraham YD 335:24-25; Nishmat Avraham EH 22:5 (Rema).
VII. Kohanim

A Kohen (male of “priestly” descent) is bound by the verse in the Torah which states, “Speak to the Kohanim, the sons of Aharon and tell them each of you shall not contaminate himself to a dead person among his people” (Leviticus 21:1), which prohibits him from being in situations that cause him to be “contaminated” by ritual impurity. This ritual impurity is imparted via proximity to a corpse or a body part, and may affect him as a patient, physician, hospital employee, or visitor to the hospital.

1. A Kohen may not be in a room or area containing a corpse or part of one, or a severed limb of a living person. This prohibition also applies to all rooms, corridors, or staircases through which the corpse will be transported.

2. When a deceased patient is in a room, the entire intended path of egress is forbidden to a Kohen. This includes:
   - The entire hallway from the room to the elevator (even the part of the hallway that will not be traversed, until the hallway ends at a wall or a door).
   - The elevator itself.
   - The hallway from the elevator to the morgue, or in the case of direct removal by the mortuary, the loading dock.
   - The hallway from the morgue to the loading dock.

3a. A Kohen who is not seriously ill may thus not enter a hospital when it is known that a corpse is in the building. However, when there is a need to enter the hospital, we rely on the ruling that where a majority of corpses will be deceased Gentiles (who are not subject to the Torah's system of purity and impurity), we are lenient to enable the performance of a Mitzvah, and certainly in order to seek medical treatment.

3b. Outside of Israel, a Kohen may visit a close relative in the hospital in which the majority of patients are not Jewish.

4a. A Kohen who is a patient, or visiting someone in the hospital, must be especially careful on a unit or floor that frequently treats dying patients, and take the following precautions:
   a) Make certain that there are no decedents on the floor before entering.
   b) Keep the door to the patient’s room closed unless it must be opened for a specific need.

---

590 I would like to thank Rabbi Tzvi Haber of the Los Angeles Intercommunity Kollel for the time he took to tour Cedars-Sinai with me and to research and present his findings.
591 Shulchan Aruch YD 369:1
592 Shach YD 372:2.
593 Lev Avraham 41:6; Igrot Moshe YD 1:230:3
594 Igrot Moshe YD 2:166. In addition to close relatives, Reb Moshe extends this permission to visiting a non-relative if family tension will occur as a result of the Kohen not visiting.
595 Lev Avraham 41:8.
c) Once again verify that no one has died before opening the door to leave the room.

4b. A Kohen who learns that someone on the floor where he is a patient or a visitor has died must remain in the room that he is in and close the doors until the corpse has been removed.⁵⁹⁶

4c. A Kohen who is not in a room when he finds out about a corpse in the area must leave immediately if possible, and expedite his exit by taking the most direct and quickest route possible in order to limit his exposure to possible ritual contamination.

- Cedars-Sinai’s patient population generally ranges from about 25% to 30% Jewish. Therefore it is safe to assume that there is a minority of Jewish patients at any given time.
- At Cedars-Sinai, decedents are usually in the morgue for up to 2 days and the average number of decedents in the morgue ranges from about 9-12. It is therefore safe to assume that at any given moment there is a Jewish decedent in the morgue.
- One should contact the Jewish Chaplain for assistance in verifying if there are any decedents on a particular floor. One should avoid asking such questions of other members of the hospital staff.

Lower Level

- The morgue is located under the North Tower on the Lower Level of the hospital. Also located on the Lower Level are a pharmacy, kitchens, an outpatient cancer center, the loading docks, and many offices.
- Decedents are removed from the hospital by taking them from their room to the morgue (the elevators used are usually the freight elevators or the back elevators, not the standard visitor elevators). They are then taken from the morgue, through a hallway that passes directly by the pharmacy entrance, and a number of doors and offices, through the under-street tunnel to beneath the South Tower, and then out to the loading dock.
- In the event that the patient is not taken to the morgue and is removed directly from the room by the mortuary, the same procedures and pathways are taken, without the stop in the morgue.
- Assuming that at any given time there is a Jewish decedent in the morgue, it is prohibited for a Kohen to enter the part of the Lower Level that houses the morgue. Based on the rule of “Sof Tumah Latzait,” that we consider the eventual path of the deceased as if it is there now, there would be ritual contamination (“Tumah”) along the entire length of the eventual route of the decedent that would spread through any doors or windows that open to that path.

⁵⁹⁶ Nishmat Avraham YD 372:1.

- Removing the decedent from the hospital is done via the service entrance, comprised of loading docks and a pedestrian ramp. There is a ledge jutting out far above the door, which surrounds the entire hospital. An awning has been constructed over the service entrance in order to constrain the ritual contamination (“Tumah”) until the end of the awning, not allowing it to rise up to the ledge. Once the awning ends and the ritual contamination (“Tumah”) can rise, there is nothing above it, and the ritual contamination thus completely leaves the building and is not trapped or drawn around the entire edifice as it was before this awning was erected.

Abortions and Amputations

- Abortions and amputations at Cedars-Sinai are performed in operating rooms that have at least two doors between them and any patient rooms.

- Amputated limbs and aborted fetuses are often taken to the pathology lab for analysis. The pathology lab is located on the 8th floor of the south tower, room #8714 (to the right of the elevators). Although one can assume that the specimens are generally not from Jewish patients, it would be commendable for Kohanim to avoid the area.
A. Positioning of the Body

1. After death, a human body is still considered sacred and should be treated with the utmost respect.\textsuperscript{598} Once death has been established, it is customary not to touch the corpse for about 20 minutes,\textsuperscript{599} after which some of the following customs are observed by family members if possible:

2. One should open a window in the room if possible.\textsuperscript{600}

3a. The eyes and mouth should be gently closed\textsuperscript{601} and the head elevated if possible.

3b. If the mouth remains open, then:
   - The chin should be tied with a bandage or towel around the head,\textsuperscript{602} or
   - One may place a prop, such as a rolled up towel, under the chin, or
   - If the mouth still remains open, then it should be covered with a clean cloth.\textsuperscript{603}

4. The body should be lying on its back, and straightened out as much as possible.\textsuperscript{604} This includes:
   - Legs straight out.
   - Arms straightened at the side of the body.
   - Hands are to be opened as completely as possible, with the palms facing the ceiling, if possible.

5. If the body must be turned for any reason, it may be turned on either side but not face down.

6a. The body and head should be completely covered with a sheet (not a warm heavy blanket).

6b. When the body is disrobed, the genital area should remain covered by a cloth at all times.

7. The room which the body is in should be kept as cool as possible.

8. When the body is placed on the appropriate stretcher and transferred to the morgue or mortuary, it should always be transported feet first.

\textsuperscript{597} I would like to thank Rabbi Elchonon Zohn, director of the National Association of Chevra Kadisha, who was consulted extensively in the preparation of this section, particularly regarding the policies that he developed with Rabbi Zev Schostak for the Gurwin Jewish Nursing and Rehabilitation Center in Commack, New York.

\textsuperscript{598} \textit{Gesher Hachaim} vol. 1, 5:1.

\textsuperscript{599} \textit{Ibid.}, 3:2 (1).

\textsuperscript{600} \textit{Zichron Meir al Aveilut}, 166.

\textsuperscript{601} \textit{Shulchan Aruch YD}, 352:4. The \textit{Chochmat Adam} 157:9 mentions a custom of having the firstborn son of the deceased be the one to close the eyes when possible.

\textsuperscript{602} \textit{Ibid.}

\textsuperscript{603} \textit{Yesodei Semachot}, pg. 142, 6a.

\textsuperscript{604} \textit{Gesher Hachaim} vol. 1, 15:2 (6).
B. Treatment of the body on Shabbat and Festivals

1. The book “Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah” states, “On Shabbat and Yom Tov [Festivals], a corpse is muktzeh and may not be moved. Consequently, one should not close the eyes of a person who has died, or straighten his limbs. Nevertheless, there are those who are accustomed to be lenient in this respect, and, in such a case, one should raise no objection, but, if possible, they should perform these activities with the aid of a non-muktzeh object which they hold, so that their hands should not come into direct contact with the dead body.” 605

2. Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah continues that on Shabbat, “One may tie a bandage round the head of the corpse, to prevent the jaw from opening wider, but 1) one should not tighten the bandage in such a way as to close the already open mouth and 2) one should beware not to tie a double knot.” 606

3. If the corpse must be transported to another part of the hospital on Shabbat via an elevator, someone who is not Jewish should transport the body and summon the elevator, but a Jew may accompany the corpse. 607

4. When a body is transferred in a car on Shabbat by a driver who is not Jewish to a mortuary where someone designated to watch the body is waiting, it is not necessary to have a Jew watch over the body in the car for this short time [this concept is discussed in the next paragraph].

C. Post-Mortem Care

1a. It is customary to ensure that someone watches over the body from the time of death until the burial 608 as an expression of honor to the deceased and to protect the body. 609

1b. When the body is in a generally safe place, it is permissible for the person who is watching over it to leave its presence for a short time, 610 such as when the nurses prepare the body to be discharged or one is needed to sign a death certificate or make funeral arrangements.

2. The body should not be washed by any hospital staff. However, any wound should be contained or covered to prevent flow of blood or any bodily fluids.

3. Any blood emitted from the body at the time of death is to be buried with the deceased. Consequently, one must ensure that:

605 Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah 64:8
606 Ibid.
609 Gesher Hachaim 5:4 (4).
610 Igrot Moshe YD 1:225.
All tubes (e.g., IV lines, gastric tubes, etc.) should be knotted as close to site as possible, cut above the knot and taped down in place.

Urinary catheters may be removed and discarded, though it is best to leave catheters that are inserted into the body for the mortuary to remove.

No bandages or wound dressings should be removed.

If any blood is found on the clothing or linen of the deceased, it should be removed, inserted in a plastic bag, and placed in the body bag together with the deceased.

Amputated limbs are also often buried with the person, especially in cases of accidents presenting in the Emergency Department.

4. Although it is ideal for the mortuary to respectfully handle removal of all tubes, a patient who is intubated may be gently extubated by the hospital staff before the mortuary arrives in order to prevent disfiguration of the deceased's face.

5. Dentures should not be removed unless he or she made their wishes known beforehand to have them discarded. Prosthesis should also not be removed. If dentures or prostheses are not on the deceased at the time of death, they should be placed in a body bag for burial with the deceased. In most instances, they are buried together with the deceased.

- Once a death occurs, it is Cedars-Sinai’s policy that if a family member/significant other is present at the time of death or immediately thereafter, time should be allowed for them to spend with the deceased.
- The Decedent Affairs Coordinator or Crisis Nurse will advise the family/significant other to contact a mortuary to make the necessary arrangements for disposition of the body, and appropriate paperwork will be signed.
- As stated in the California Health and Safety Code, the decedent should not remain in the patient care area for more than four hours from the time of death. At the discretion of the Unit Manager or his/her designee, this time limit may sometimes be extended in unusual circumstances, though this is not always possible.
- One may wish to seek guidance from their rabbi when choosing a mortuary, or they may contact one of Cedars-Sinai’s chaplains, or consult the “Guide to Jewish Burial and Mourning Practices” pamphlet in the Spiritual Care office.
- If the family requests assistance from the hospital staff, a copy of the entire Index of Mortuaries will be provided.
• If the family cannot afford a mortuary or burial expenses, they should contact the Jewish chaplain to learn about Cedars-Sinai’s “Leibish and Shifra Pelta trust burial fund.” Arrangements may also be made through the Los Angeles County Mortuary or Jewish Family Services if financial requirements are met.

• In the event that one is told that it may be necessary to conduct an autopsy, one should contact the Jewish chaplain to discuss their options.
Bibliography

Some of the contemporary works cited frequently in this booklet include:

Hebrew

- When the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah is quoted, chapters 1-41 refer to the 2010 3rd edition, and chapters 42-68 refer to the 1989 edition, although when English quotes are taken directly from the Shemirat Shabbat Kehilchatah, it refers to the 1989 English edition published by Feldheim.

English

Roman numerals refer to chapter number, letters refer to the section within the chapters, and the numbers in parentheses refer to the paragraph within the section, so “I:B (5d)” refers to chapter I, section B, paragraph 5d. “fn” indicates footnotes.

A
Air conditioner, see “Shabbat: Air conditioner”
Arthritis, I:B (3)
Asthma, I:B (3)
Automatic doors, see “Shabbat: Automatic doors”

B
Blessings, IV:B
Breastfeeding, see “Shabbat: Nursing Mother”, “Yom Kippur: Nursing Mother”

C
Call button on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Call button”
Categories of Illness, Ch. I
Candles, see “Shabbat: Candles”
Childbirth & Pregnancy, see “Pregnancy & Childbirth”
Children, I:B, I:B (3, 5b) see also “Shabbat: Children”
Chanukah, III:E
   -Electric candles, III:E (1)
   -Location of lights, III:E (2)
   -Spouse lighting on behalf of patient, III:E (3)
Choleh She'ain Bo Sakana, see “Incapacitating Illness”
Choleh Sheyaish Bo Sakana, see “Life-threatening illness”
Corpse, Ch. VIII

D
Danger to limb, I:B (4)
Death, Ch. VIII
Depression, I:B (3, 5c)
Diabetic, I:B (5b-c)
Discharge on Shabbat/Holidays, see “Shabbat: Discharge”

E
Emergencies, I, I:B (5d)
Elevators, see “Shabbat: Elevators”
Eye infection, I:B (3-4)

F
Fast days, III:H
Festivals, Ch. III
   -Air Conditioner, III:(5b)
   -Blood donation, III:(1)
   -Candle lighting, III:(2)
   -Chol Hamoed, III:A
   -Electricity, III:(5)
   -Havdalah, III:(7)
   -Heater, III:(5b)
   -Hot water, III:(4)
   -Kiddush, III:(3)

G
Gender, interactions w th members of the opposite, see “Yichud” and “Physical contact”

H
Hand sanitizer, see “Shabbat: Hand sanitizer”
Heater, see “Shabbat: Heater”
Holidays, see “Festivals”
Holy books in an unclean environment, V (17)

I
Incapacitating Illness, I:B (3)
   -Children, status of, II:Q (2)
   -On Shabbat, II:A (5)
Infants, see “Shabbat: Children”

K
Kashrut, Ch. IV
Kohen, Ch. VII

L
Life-threatening illness, I:B (5)
   -On Shabbat, II:A (1-2d), II:A (4-5)
Lights on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Electricity”
Limb, danger to, I:B (4)

M
Maychush, I:A
Meat & Milk, IV:D
Medicine
   -Kashrut, IV:C
   -Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Medicine”
Megillah, see “Purim: Megillah reading”
Mental Illness, II:A (10) see also “Depression”
Migraine, I:B (3)
Miktzat Choli, I:A
Minor Ailments, I:A
Miscarriage, see “Pregnancy & Childbirth”
Muktza, see “Shabbat”

N
NG tube, II:L (1a), III:C (6), III:G (9), IV:B (2)
Nine days, III:I (1), III:IIi(1)
Non-Jew
   -Assisting one with a minor ailment, I:A
   -Assisting one with a life-threatening illness, I:B, II:A (2c)
- Assisting one with an incapacitating illness, I:B, II:A (5)
- Concept of asking non-Jew, II:C
- Children, being assisted by non-Jew, II:Q (2b)
- On Shabbat, II:A (2a)

Nursing, see "Shabbat: Nursing Mother", “Yom Kippur: Nursing Mother”

P
Parking, see “Shabbat: Parking & turning off a car”
Passover, III:G
- Bedikat Chametz, III:G (19-21)
- Bittul Chametz, III:G (22)
- Chametz, III:G (13-15)
- Four cups, III:G (4)
- Hand Sanitizers, III:G (18)
- Kitniyot, III:G (16-17)
- Maror, III:G (5, 7-9)
- Matzah, III:G (6-10)
- Medicine, III:G (15)
- NG tube, III:G (9)
- Nullification, III:G (22)
- PEG, see "NG tube"
- Pills, III:G (17)
- Search for Chametz, III:G (19-21)
- Seder, III:G (1-12)
- Wine, III:G (4)

PEG, see "NG tube"

Physical contact with members of the opposite gender, VI:B

Prayer, Ch. V
- Attire for prayer, V (7)
- Earliest time, V (9-12)
- Eating before prayer, V (2)
- Interruptions, V (8)
- Sitting during prayer, V (5-6)
- Unable to speak, V (3)
- Unclean environment, V (13-16)

Pregnancy & Childbirth, I:B
- Dangerous complications, I:B (5c)
- Fast days (other than Tisha B'Av & Yom Kippur), III:H (2)
- Fetus, treatment on Shabbat, II:A (8)
- Miscarriage, I:B (5c)
- Shabbat, II:O
- Tisha B'av, III:li
- Yom Kippur, III:Cii

Physical therapy on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Physical Therapy”

Purell on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Purell”

Purim, III:F
- Eating before Megillah, III:F (2)
- Megillah reading, III:F (3-5)
- Mishloach Manot, III:F (6)
- Parshat Zachor III:J (1)
- Taanit Esther, III:H (1b) see also “Eating before Megillah”

R
Rabbinic prohibitions (examples), II:A (4a)
Refrigerator, see “Shabbat: Refrigerator”

Rosh Hashanah, Ch. III:B
- Second day, III:B(1)
- "Shehecheyanu" blessing, III:B(2-3)
- Shofar, III:B(4-6)

S
Seclusion with members of the opposite gender, see “Yichud”

Sefarim, see "Holy Books"

Sefirat Haomer, III:G (23)

Shabbat, Ch. II
- Air conditioner, II:D (13-15)
- Amira L' Akum, see "Non-Jew"
- Automatic doors, II:E (11)
- Automatic sensors & faucets, II:E (13-15)
- Call button, II:G
- Calling family, II:F (7)
- Candles, II:K
- Carrying objects, II:I (3-4), II:N (1)
- Children, care of, II:Q
- Cooking food, II:M (1-2)
- Creams and oils, II:P (1-2)
- Discharge from hospital, II:I
- Driving, II:A (4b)
- Dying patient, II:A (9)
- Eating food heated for patient, II:M (3)
- Electricity, II:D
- Elevators, II:E (1-9)
- Eruv, II:I (3)
- Eruv Chatzeirot, II:N (1)
- Escalators, II:E (10)
- Fetus, II:A (8-9)
- Havdalah, II:L
- Hand sanitizer on Shabbat, II:N (6)
- Heater, II:D (13-15)
- Infants, see “Children”
- Kiddush, II:L
- Light, II:A (7)
- Medicine on Shabbat, I:B, I:B(5d), II:N (7-10), see also “Children”
- Mental Illness, II:A (10)
- Monitor, II:N (2)
- Muktza, II:A (4a), II:I(4)
- Non-Jew, see “Non-Jew”
- Nursing mother on Shabbat, II:P
- Opening cartons, cans or packages, II:M (4)
- Parking & turning off a car, II:H
- Pregnancy & childbirth, II:O
- Preparations for a weekday, II:A (4a)
- Purell on Shabbat, II:N (6)
- Physical therapy on Shabbat, II:N (5)
- Refrigerator, II:D (10a-11)
- Returning home after driving on Shabbat, II:I (1)
- Shinui, II:A (2a) see also "Shabbat: Purell"
- Signature of consent or discharge, II:J (2, 6-7)
-Soap on Shabbat, II:N (6)
-Surgery on Shabbat, II:N (3-4)
-Taxi on Shabbat/holidays, II:I (1b, 2)
-Telephone, II:F
-Thermometer on Shabbat, II:A (2c), II:N (11-14)
-Transgressing Shabbat, how to decide, II:A (3)
-Video cameras, II:E (12)
-Warming blanket, II:D (12)
-Writing, II:A (4a-b), II:I
-X-ray on Shabbat, II:N (4)

Shinui, see “Shabbat: Shinui”

Signature on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Signature of consent or discharge”

Sukkot, III:D
-Lulav & Etrog, III:D (2-5)
-Obligation to eat in Sukkah if one is assisting a patient, III:D (1)
-Obligation to eat in Sukkah if one is ill, III:D (1)

Suicidal Patient, II:A (10)
Surgery; scheduling, II:N (3)

T
Taanit, see “Fast days”
Taanit Esther, see “Purim: Eating before Megillah” Tallit
-Earliest time, V (9, 12)

Tefillin, V:A
-Cast or bandage, V (6b-c, 10)
-Earliest time, V (9, 12)
-IV tubes, V:A (6a)
-Missing part of the arm, V:A (2)
-Painful, V:A (3)
-Paralyzed arm, V:A (7-8)
-Woman assisting man, V:A (9)

Telephone on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Telephone”
Thermometer on Shabbat, see “Shabbat: Thermometer”
Tisha B’Av, III:I
-Medication, III:I (5)
-Pregnancy & Childbirth, III:li
-Vision problems and fasting, III:I (4)

Torah prohibitions (examples), II:A (4b)
Touching members of the opposite gender, see “Physical contact.”

Tumah, see “Kohen”

W
Warming blanket, see “Shabbat: Warming blanket”
Washing hands
-Prior to a meal, IV:A
-Upon awaking in the morning, V(1)

Y
Yichud, VI:A
Yom Tov, see “Festivals”
Yom Kippur, Ch. III:C
-Blessings over food, III:C (11-15)
-Dangerously ill, III:C (3)
-Diabetic, III:C (9)

-Z
Zachor, see “Purim: Parshat Zachor”

-Doctors’ orders, III:C(4)
-Drinking on, see “Measurements, drinking in”
-Eating on, III:C (3-10), see also “Measurements”
-Measurements, eating in, III:Ci (1-5)
-Measurements, drinking in, III:Ci (6-9)
-Medication, III:C (16-18)
-NG tube, III:C (6)
-Nursing Mother on Yom Kippur, III:Cii (6)
-PEG, see “NG tube”
-Prayer, III:C(1-2)
-Pregnancy & Childbirth, III:Cii
-Tube feeding, III:C (6)
Quick Reference Guide for Observant Jews at Cedars-Sinai

- To obtain kosher food:
  - Patients have the option of ordering kosher food which is prepared on-site under the full-time supervision of the RCC.
  - There is a “kosher corner” in our cafeteria (located on the Street Level of the South Tower), which contains a variety of kosher options.
  - For those unable to purchase food, meal vouchers for free food in our cafeteria (which can also be used on Shabbat) are available in the back of our Chapel on the Plaza Level, in the drawer beneath the Talleisim (in the box labeled “שמירת שבעת”).
  - There are also complimentary dry kosher foods (as well as many other supplies) available in the “Bikur Cholim” closet in the back corner of our Chapel.
  - Additionally, one may access our Kosher Hospitality Pantry (room 4202 “Pediatric Parent Resource Room”) on the 4th floor in the North Tower, just to the east of the patient rooms, which offers 24-hour access to a kosher refrigerator, freezer, kosher foods, snacks and beverages, including Cholov Yisrael items, maintained by Chai Lifeline and community volunteers.

- For those who are unable to pay for parking when leaving the hospital, parking validation passes are available in the back of the Chapel on the Plaza Level, in the drawer beneath the Talleisim (in the box labeled “שמירת שבעת”).

- For those who are unable to drive home, such as patients discharged on Shabbat, a voucher for a complimentary taxi ride may be obtained by talking to the Social Worker on one’s unit or contacting the nursing office after hours.

- A campus map of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center for Sabbath Observers, including location of manual doors and Sabbath elevators, is printed at the back of this guidebook.

- Siddurim (prayer books), Chumashim (printed Torahs), electric Sabbath candles, and reading material are available in our Chapel on the Plaza Level, which is always open. The books are along the back wall, and the candles are located in a cabinet to the left of the Aron Kodesh on the front wall. One may contact the Spiritual Care office to have any of these items delivered to their room.

- Although individual refrigerators are not permitted in patient rooms in the Saperstein Critical Care Tower, one may utilize a portable cooler, which may be obtained by contacting the Spiritual Care office.

- Tefillin are available in the Spiritual Care office on the Plaza Level.

- Various personal care & hygiene items may be obtained by Chaplains or Patient Relations representatives.

- To reach a Cedars-Sinai rabbi or chaplain, contact the Spiritual Care office at (310) 423-5550, or after hours, contact the nursing office at (310) 423-5180.

- For more information, see the Spiritual Care Department website, www.cedars-sinai.edu/Spiritualcare
Cedars-Sinai Campus Map for Sabbath Observance

A Manual (Non-electric) Doors
B Stairs from Street Level to Plaza Level and Manual Entry into Plaza Lobby
C Stairs from Plaza Level to Patient Floors
D Sabbath Elevators
   Stop automatically at each floor on Saturdays and Jewish holidays. #13 North Tower, #38 Seperstein.
E Superstein Sabbath Entrance
   Open Fridays 6 to 9 p.m., Saturdays and Jewish holidays 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Rabbi Jason Weiner, BCC is a board-certified chaplain and serves as the Senior Rabbi and Manager of the Spiritual Care Department at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. He may be reached at Jason.Weiner@cshs.org